FOREWORD

It is well known that the reconstruction of early Indian history is based mainly on epigraphical evidence. This recognition is not only due to the spectacular nature of the contribution of inscriptions, but also to the fact that the number of scholars engaged in this field of study is considerable. On the other hand, the students of early Indian geography are not many, so that the part played by inscriptions in this study has received lesser emphasis. Still, however, the value of epigraphic evidence in determining the location of Lumbini-grāma, Śrāvastī, etc., was long ago recognised, and it has been emphasised by the welcome light recently thrown by inscriptions on the controversies regarding the location of Kauśāmbī and Kārnasuvarṇa. My work entitled Cosmography and Geography in Early Indian Literature (Calcutta, 1967), published six years ago, has a small section bearing the title 'Cosmography and Geography in Inscriptions'. It was meant to draw the attention of students to the importance of epigraphical evidence in the study of the subjects.

Praise is due to Dr. P. Gupta for the selection of Geography in Ancient Indian Inscriptions upto 650 A.D. as the subject of his study and for the completion of the undertaking in a more or less exhaustive manner. He has dealt with the peoples, countries, political divisions, cities, villages, mountains and rivers mentioned in the inscriptions which have been discovered in the different regions of the country. There was so far no book on early Indian geography based exclusively on epigraphic evidence, and Dr. Gupta's work removes that want.

I recommend the book to the students of Indian history in general and of early Indian geography in particular.

PREFACE

Late Professor V. S. Agrawala once pertinently remarked that 'a complete concordance of all the geographical names with details about them on the basis of the thousands of published inscriptions from all over India would constitute the eternal bed-rock of ancient Indian geography'. These words greatly inspired me to write a book on geography on the basis of ancient Indian inscriptions.

The present work Geography in Ancient Indian Inscriptions (upto 650 A.D.) is the outcome of years of patient and painstaking probe into all kinds of sources relating to the detailing of inscriptions on ancient Indian geography.

This work deals with the geography of ancient India as revealed in Prakrit and Sanskrit inscriptions from the time of Aśoka upto the end of the reign of Harṣavardhana. It discusses the peoples, countries, and the political divisions; the ancient cities, towns and villages; and the mountains and the rivers of ancient India. The study is not merely limited to the identification of various geographical names, but all other relevant details regarding them have also been incorporated at the appropriate places.

The important dynasties represented in this work are those of the Mauryas, the Śuṅgas, the Indo-Greeks, the Śakas, Parthians and Kuṣānas, the Imperial Guptas and feudatories, the Hūnas, the Maukharis and the Puṣpabhūti in Northern India; and the Sātavāhanas, the Vākāṭakas, the Mahā-Meghavāhanas, the Pāṇḍu-varṣiis, the Ikṣvākus, the Māṣbaras, the Ānandas, the Vāsiṣṭhas, the Viṣṇukunḍins, the Pallavas, the Kadambas, the Eastern and Western Gaṅgas, the Cālukyas of Vātāpi, etc., in the South.

I might mention here that even those records which cannot be definitely related to any particular dynasty have been duly looked into.

The documentary sources which have been intensively used in the course of this study originated from all kinds of written materials including such well-known research journals and documents as Epigraphia Indica, Epigraphia Carnatica, Indian Antiquary, Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, the Reports of the Archaeological Survey as well as the Reports on South Indian Epigraphy, and several volumes of the Corpus of Indian inscriptions published under the Archaeological survey.

The associated literary sources, namely, indigenous texts on geography, incidental references noted from Indian works of a non-geographical character, and foreign accounts have also been made use of wherever found necessary. Moreover, numismatic and archaeological sources too have not been overlooked.

The work is divided into five chapters. The first chapter discusses the peoples, countries, and the political divisions of the contemporary India. The traditional system of a five-fold division has been maintained ; and Southern India has been further classified into four regions, viz., the Eastern Deccan, the Central Deccan, the Western Deccan, and the Far South. Chapter II gives the identification and description of various cities (181 in number) ; and Chapter III describes the 877 villages referred to in the relevant epigraphs along with location and setting. The next chapter relates to the mountain-ranges of India as revealed in inscriptions in the light of the Mountain System of the Puranic tradition. This is followed by another chapter on the importance of rivers and their sources.

A brief introduction to the work deals with the sources of Ancient Indian Geography and the importance of epigraphic records in that context.

The work also includes photographic copies of the important inscriptions studied which will be of invaluable help to the scholars interested in such inscriptions. Minutely-detailed indices relating to place-names and inscriptions given at the end will virtually serve as a lexicon of ancient Indian geographical locations as well as an index to inscriptions.

I am fully aware that my work on the study of a complex and vast subject of ancient Indian geography in inscriptions may not have covered all kinds of studies made on the subject as well as inscriptions themselves which have been discovered so far. I shall therefore, always look forward to receive any kind of such information from scholars working in the field. I shall also be grateful to my readers for the suggestions they forward to me to further improve the work.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In the first place I express my sincerest feeling of gratitude for the kind encouragement received from Professor Jagannath Agrawal but for whose inspiration and guidance the work would never have been undertaken. I also express my great indebtedness to Acharya Vishwa Bandhu, Director, Vishveshvaranand Institute, Hoshiarpur, who provided me all kinds of necessary help including the library facilities. I am also thankful to the staff of the Library of Archaeological Survey of India, New Delhi, for their help and cooperation.

I have to record my thanks to Professor Surya Kanta without whose paternal care this work would not have been completed in time. The name of the late Dr. Buddha Prakash has also to be mentioned who always inspired and encouraged me to go ahead with the work. I shall be failing in my duty if I do not pay my thanks to Dr. Gopikamohan Bhattacharya who lent me considerable help when the work was nearing completion.

I am extremely grateful to Dr. D. C. Sircar who readily agreed to write a Foreword for this book inspite of his heavy pre-occupations.

My thanks are due to Shri K. V. Sharma, Dr. Mantosh Chandlury, Shri Suresh Bansal, and many others for their help at various stages in the preparation of this book.

Lastly, my thanks are due to Bharatiya Vidya Bhawan, Bombay, for their giving me permission to include a map on Asoka's Empire in the work.

The courtesy of the Archaeological Survey of India in making available photographs reproduced in this book is also very gratefully acknowledged.

GÉOGRAPHY IN ANCIENT INDIAN INSCRIPTIONS

astrological literature of Ancient India. One of the earliest & most remarkable composition of this type is the famous river hymn of the R̥gveda.<sup>1</sup> No less remarkable are the sections of the Atharvaveda (XIX, 17, 1-9) and the Altareya Brāhmaṇa (VIII, 14) referring to the five-fold division of India. Fuller details are given in the two great Epics and the Purāṇas. They contain some chapters giving a fairly accurate account of not only the different territorial divisions of India, but also of her rivers, mountains, lakes, forests, deserts, towns, countries, and peoples. The Tīrthayātrā-Digvijaya sections and the Jambukhaṇḍa-vinirmāṇa-parva of the Mahābhārata, the four cantos (40-43) of the Kiṣkindhyākāṇḍa of the Rāmāyana, and the Bhuvanakośa and the Jambudvīpa-varṇana of the Purāṇas, and the Kāvya-mīmāṃsā of Rājaśekhara are rich in geographical information. Of the same type, but of inferior value is the Kūrma-vibhāga or the Kūrma-Niveśa section of the Purāṇic and astrological works like the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa (Chapter 58), the Bṛhat-Saṁhitā and the Pūrāṣara Tantra.

The most serious difficulty in the way of utilizing the Epic and Purāṇic accounts is the corruption of the texts. The Bṛhat-Saṁhitā is undoubtedly more free from textual corruption. Dr. S. B. Chaudhuri in his work Ethnic Settlements in Ancient India has made a bold attempt in presenting a critical scrutiny of the various forms in which the names appear in different texts and in restoring the correct and original designation. W. Kirfel<sup>2</sup> and Professor D. C. Sircar<sup>3</sup> have made independent critical studies of the geographical purāṇic texts. C. A. Lewis has now started to make a comparative study of the results of these two scholars.<sup>4</sup> Dr. V. S. Agrawala has added his further notes and comments on the study made by these authors.<sup>5</sup>

Descriptions of India, and particularly of its central region, are also found in Buddhist literature. The Pāli Aṅguttara Nikāya is the main source of information about the geographical situation and other details of sixteen Mahājanapadas. The Jambuddīvapaṇṇatti, which is the sixth Upāṅga of the Jāinas, contains a description of Jambudvīpa as well as that of Bhāratavarṣa.

(2) Besides long texts of a decidedly geographical character,

1. R̥gveda, X, 75.

2. Das Purāṇi Von Weltgebäude, Bonn, 1954, pp. 112 ff.

3. IHQ, XXI, p. 267 ff; Studies in the Geography, pp. 17-38.

4. Purāṇam, IV, pp. 112-145; 245-276.

5. Ibid., V, pp. 161-181.

Indian literature, both religious and secular, contains numerous isolated references to countries, cities, rivers and mountains, forests and deserts, which collectively amount to a considerable addition to geographical knowledge. Of special value are the references in the Jātakas, Vinaya texts, the Aṅguttare Nikāya, the Sutta-Nipāta, the Mahāgovindasuttanta, the Dhammapada commentary, the Paramatthajotikā, the Dīvyāvadāna, the Mahāvastu, the Jaina sūtras, the early Tamil poems, the grammatical works of Pāṇini & Patañjali, the Kāvya of Kālidāsa and Daṇḍin, the Dharmasūtra of Bodhāyana, the Dharmaśāstra of Manu, the Arthasāstra of Kauṭilya, the Kāmasūtra of Vātsyāyana with its commentary, and the Paumacariya.

(3) The Persians and the Greeks are the earliest foreign people to leave accounts of India. The Achaemenid inscriptions of Persia (sixth and fifth century B.C.) and the contemporaneous works of early Greek writers like Hekataios and Herodotus show acquaintance with Gandhāra and the Indus Valley as far as the desert of Rajasthan. Megasthenes is quoted by Arrian as conveying detailed information about the Indus and the Gaṅgā with their tributaries. The realm of the Paṇḍyas in Far South was also known to the famous Greek ambassador. 'Classical geographers of India, who accompanied Alexander and followed in his train for a period of more than five centuries have left a vast body of literature, a class by itself, which is one of the richest sources of Indian economic, commercial and political geography. Ptolemy and Periplus treat of Indian geography frankly as a science, presenting a systematic treatment of high value. Jerini in his researches on Ptolemy's geography of eastern Asia and Professor Renou in his new edition of Ptolemy's geography, and Schoff in his Periplus have done great service to Indian geographical studies. But the pioneer contribution of a monumental nature still unsurpassed, we owe to the labours of Prof. McCrindle whose six volumes of the classical sources of Indian geography are a valuable mine of knowledge about India.'

'Fa-hien, Yuan-Chwang, I-Tsing, Sung-yun are classical names whose accounts of travels between China and India are priceless treasures as source of Indian history and culture and none the less of geography.' 'Beal, Watters, and last of all, Arther Walley in his latest book The Real Tripitaka and other Pieces, which is a report on the travel of the Master of the Law, Dharmācārya Moksācārya Yuan-Chwang compiled from several sources, have made capital contributions to Indian geographical study through concentrated work on the Yuan-Chwang Saga.<sup>1</sup>

(4) Inscriptions and coins 'are hardly less important to the student of Indian geography than to the student of Indian history. They not only afford us glimpses of the historical map of India in definite epochs, but supplement the information and advance the knowledge derived from literary sources. Who would ever have heard of the kingdoms of Satiyaputra and Dāvāka, and the province of Vāraka-maṇḍala, but for the inscriptions of Aśoka and Samudragupta and the copper-plate grants of Dharmāditya, Gopacandra and Samācārādeva? Who would, again, have perceived the intimate connection between the city of Mādhyamikā and the country of the Śibis but for certain coins discovered near Chitor?'<sup>2</sup>

Epigraphic records regulate every information that we gather from other sources. The above fact can be realised in the field of research of Geography of ancient India also. The pillar in Situ bearing the inscription that, 'here was born the Śākya sage', certainly leaves no doubt about the birth-place of Mahātmā Buddha.

'Besides giving the names of countries the inscriptions are also rich in other classes of geographical names, e.g., mountains, rivers forming boundaries of kingdoms, capital cities, military encampments, trading emporia, and above all smaller administrative divisions. The land grants form a class by themselves as mentioning the names of villages granted by the rulers to the donees. Such villages and even the names of hamlets are usually accompanied with information about their boundaries, which separate them from other units. Sometimes single fields or pieces of land executed by the secretariat officers in favour of the purchasers. All this acquaints us with the geographical material spread over the entire country in a surprisingly rich manner'.<sup>3</sup>

The above material is spread mainly over scores of research journals in which the inscriptions have been edited, e.g., Epigraphia Indica, Indian Antiquary, Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, and the Reports of the Archaeological Survey as well as Reports on South Indian Epigraphy, and the several volumes of the Corpus of Indian Inscriptions published under the Archaeological Survey. Fortunately most of these publications are equipped with detailed indexes of proper names and the work of preparing a geographical dictionary from this source will rather be found to be of less difficulty. As Professor V. S. Agrawala maintains, 'it should be remembered that a study of geography consists not merely in the indexing of names, howsoever important that may be, but in interpreting that material as a science contributing towards the elucidation of the political, physical commercial, economic and ethnographical history of the land. Geography is the true bed-rock of historical knowledge and it is an undeniable fact that the study of Indian history will remain incomplete without a corresponding effort to tackle the problem of its geography.'<sup>1</sup>

CHAPTER I

THE PEOPLES, COUNTRIES AND THE POLITICAL DIVISIONS

This chapter deals with the peoples, countries and the political divisions of Ancient India. The word janapada occurs in the Aśokan edicts, and the Myakadoni inscription<sup>1</sup> of Śrī Pulumāvi. It literally means the abode (pada) of the tribe (jana). It is used in the Brāhmaṇas to denote a people or the land or realm it occupies. Along with being a political unit, each Janapada had its own distinctive characteristics, which are noted by the epic poets and observers like Ptolemy, Vātsyāyana, Yuan Chwang, Bharata, Daṇḍin and Rājasekhara. Epigraphic sources, however, are very poor in this aspect. Their main importance lies in advancing material, so that we can observe how the boundaries of the different janapadas in question varied from age to age, and that at times the same or similar names were applied to localities distinct from one another. Moreover, they inform us that with the growth of imperialism, the different janapadas transformed into a district or tāluq, āhāra, viṣaya or maṇḍala of the empire.

The expression rāṣṭra is used in a purely political sense in the Vedic texts. In early Buddhist texts, it has become a synonym of Janapada in its political aspect. It is not directly referred to in Aśokan epigraphs, but may be implied by the derivative raṣṭhika, rāṣṭrika possibly identical with the rāṣṭriya of the Junagarh rock inscription<sup>2</sup> of Rudradāman. Unlike janapada, it occurs frequently in inscriptions from the fourth century A.D. onwards as the designation of an administrative unit. Vākātaka records frequently mention it. The provinces like Mālava and Surāṣṭra during the Gupta empire were probably known as deśas. In the time of the Cālukyas of Vātāpi and Veṅgi, the designation deśa held the field. The most common designation of administrative unit in the Sātavāhanas is the āhāra (or hāra). The term occurs earlier in

1. EI, XVII, p. 135.

2. Select Inscriptions, p. 170.

Aśoka's inscriptions to denote the area under the jurisdiction of a special class of mahāmātras. The term āhāra is often followed by the term viṣaya during the succeeding period. The term viṣaya is most common since the period of Kadambas in the south. Some of the Pallava and Ikṣvāku monarchs show a preference for the old term raṣṭha or rāṣṭra. About the terms denoting smaller administrative units, we shall deal a little later (p. 21).

THE GEOGRAPHICAL EXTENT OF ANCIENT INDIA

Before dealing with the description of the different peoples, countries and political divisions of ancient India, it is necessary to have an idea of its names and boundaries, as given in the inscriptions. In inscriptions, we find very rarely an expression like the Purāṇic Bhāratavarṣa, which is described therein as lying 'between the Himālaya and the sea'<sup>1</sup> or as 'bounded in the south, west and east by the sea and in the north by the Himavat resembling the string of a bow'.<sup>2</sup> Out of more than two thousand Indian inscriptions ranging in date from the Mauryan period to the middle of the seventh century A.D., we come across only once the use of its Prakrit form Bharadavasa and that is in the Hathigumpha inscription<sup>3</sup> of Khāravela. Another expression, Jambudīpa,<sup>4</sup> used in Aśoka's Minor Rock Edict 1, probably, refers to his empire, which included almost the whole of the country of the pre-partition period with the exception of Assam and certain small kingdoms to the south of Mysore, but together with parts of Afghanistan. In Buddhist tradition, the king Aśoka is described as a dvīpa-cakravartin, i.e., the ruler of the entire Jambudvīpa.<sup>5</sup> The Dhauli version of Aśoka's Fifth Rock Edict refers to the appointment of dharma-mahāmātras, throughout the earth (sarva-puṭhaviyam), while all the other versions read sarvatra viṣṭe (i.e., everywhere in the dominions of Aśoka) in that context.<sup>6</sup> In some Purāṇic passages, e.g., Kūrma I, 35, 41, Jambudvīpa seems to comprise the same land as was included in the Bhāratavarṣa, although according to the other popular conceptions, Bhārata-

3. EI, XX, p. 79.

4. Aśoka's Inscriptions, 135, EI, XXXI, 209; Jambudvīpa occurs in two more inscriptions, i.e., Kāle inscription, ASWI, 90, and Kura Salt Range inscription of Toramāṇa, Select Inscriptions, 398.

vārṣa was merely a part of the Jambudvīpa, which itself corresponded to whole of Asia.

Epigraphic references to the Indian monarchs (Samrāt) either as rulers or as conquerors of 'the whole earth'<sup>1</sup> or 'the earth encircled by four seas,'<sup>2</sup> often contain the names of definite localities in the north, east, south and west of the whole earth and they practically correspond to the boundaries of ancient Bhāratavarṣa. The Mehrauli Iron Pillar inscription<sup>3</sup> of Candrarāja describes the king as having conquered the Vaṅgas (of southern Bengal) in the east, crossed the seven mouths of the Sindhu (or Indus) in the west, defeated the Bāhlikas (inhabiting the Balkh region on the Oxus) in the north and subdued certain people on the shores of the southern sea (Indian Ocean). A Mandasaur inscription<sup>4</sup> describes king Yaśodharman as 'having subdued the whole land bounded by the Lauhitya (Brahmaputra) in the east, the Mahendra (Mahendragiri in the Tinnevely district) in the south, the Himālayas in the north and the western sea (Pāścīma Payodhī) in the west.'

THE FIVE-FOLD DIVISION

To mention in a few words about the traditional division of ancient India may not be out of place here. The five-fold division of India is referred to in the Bhuvanakośa section of the Purāṇas, in the Kāvya-mīmāṃsā of Rājasekhara, in the Śakti-saigama Tantra (8th Paṭala, Bk. III) as well as in the Chinese official records of the Thang dynasty of the seventh century A.D. Professor B.C. Law has also adopted the same traditional system in his work, Historical Geography of Ancient India. Inscriptions, however, nowhere refer to this system. We come across the two terms Āryāvarta and Dakṣiṇāpatha in the inscriptions, Āryāvarta designating, the land lying between the Vindhyaś and the Himādri, and the Dakṣiṇāpātha, the land lying beyond the Vindhyaś and the Narmadā. Allahabad stone pillar inscription of Samudragupta mentions the names of nine rulers of Āryāvarta, who were violently exterminated by Samudragupta.<sup>5</sup> Moreover, this inscription refers to the lords of thirteen kingdoms of Dakṣiṇāpatha ranging right from the South Kosala in the north to Kāñci (Conjeeveram) in the south. Sometimes, we find the expression Uttarāpatha in place of Āryāvarta. Śravaṇa Belgola Epitaph<sup>1</sup> of Prabhācandra refers to the movement of the entire Śiṅgha from northern India (Uttarāpatha) to Deccan (Dakṣiṇāpatha).

In some of the inscriptions, a reference to the Tamil country has also been made. The earliest epigraphic reference to Tamira or Tamila is found in Hāthīgumphā inscription<sup>2</sup> of Khāravēla. Tamira or Tamila is the origin of Damiṣa (Draviḍa), which finds mention in Nāgārjunikoṇḍa second Apsidal Temple Inscription<sup>3</sup> and in Mahākūṭa Inscription<sup>4</sup> of Maṅgalēśa. We can say that Tramiṣa would be a perfectly correct substitute for Dramiṣa.<sup>5</sup> The country called Dramiṣa, Tramiṣa or Draviḍa is generally excluded from the territory called Dakṣiṇāpatha. The Coḷas, Pāṇḍyas, Keralaputas and the Satiyaputas mentioned in the Aśokan inscriptions lay beyond his empire and these should be taken as situated in the Tamil country. Similarly, Sātavāhanas, who are known as Lords of Dakṣiṇāpatha held their sway over the land, which did not include the territories of Draviḍas.

Madhya-deśa, so often mentioned in early Brāhmanical and Buddhist texts, does not find any mention in the inscriptions. In Sarnath Inscription<sup>6</sup> of Prakaśāditya, there is hardly any scope for the mention of Madhya-deśa, as there the reading is not clear after madhya and madhya too cannot be read with certainty.

As regards the occurrence of an expression like Aparānta or Āparānta in some of the inscriptions, we can say that it does not perhaps give the sense of a traditional division mentioned by the terms aparānta or paścād-deśa. Aparānta of the Aśokan inscriptions includes the countries, Rāṣṭrikas and Ptenikas, which should be placed in the Dakṣiṇāpatha.

Inscriptions, thus, mainly refer to the two divisions of India, viz. North and South, if not the three when Far South is separated from the Deccan. However, the importance of the five-fold division cannot be over-looked, keeping in view the vastness of the area covered by Āryāvarta, which alone roughly corresponded to the four divisions, viz. (1) Udīcya or Uttarāpatha (Northern India comprising Punjab, Kashmir and the adjoining hilly regions with the whole of eastern Afghanistan beyond the Indus and the present Cis-Sutlej land to the west of the Sarasvatī river), (2) Madhya-deśa (Middle country—Central India comprising the whole of the Gangetic provinces from Thanesar to the head of the Delta and from the Himalayan mountain to the banks of the Narmada), (3) Aparānta (Western India comprising Sind, western Rajasthan, Gujarat and a portion of the adjoining coast on the lower course of the Narmada river), and (4) Prācya (Eastern India comprising Assam and Bengal including the whole of the Gangetic delta). I have, therefore, in the following pages tried to place the different geographical units under the five traditional divisions.

NORTHERN INDIA

Aśokan inscriptions<sup>1</sup> refer to the kingdoms of the Yonas, Kambojas, Gandhāras, Pāradas, Nābhakas and Nābhapāntis—all located in northern India. The Yonas are recorded as Yavana in some of the inscriptions.<sup>2</sup> They have been identified with the Bāhlikas, the people of Balkh.<sup>3</sup> Probably, the Hūnas<sup>4</sup> living on the Oxus in the Balkh region are identical with the Bāhlikas, which were conquered by king Candar after crossing the Indus Delta.<sup>5</sup> It may be mentioned here that Professor D. C. Sircar places the Yavanas in Kabul and Kandahar.<sup>6</sup> Dr. K. D. Bajpai in this connection says that present Balis south of Quetta and the Bolan pass seem to have retained the old name of the Vāhlikas.<sup>7</sup>

The Kambojas were closely associated with the Yonas. Professor Sircar located them round about Kandahar in Afghanistan.<sup>8</sup> Professor V. S. Agrawala, however, prefers to place them in the area of Ghalcha dialects in Pamir, where the root java is still current in the sense of going.<sup>9</sup> The identification finds support from Raghuvamśa,<sup>10</sup> where Raghu is said to have invaded the Kamboja country after his battle with the Hūnas on the Oxus.

Aśoka's edicts mention the Gandhāras<sup>1</sup> next to Kambojas. The Gandhāra country was divided into two parts, (1) on the eastern side of the Indus with Takṣaśilā as capital and (2) the Bajaur and Swat region with Puṣkalāvati as the biggest town. Thus, it comprised Rawalpindi-Peshawar region, or we may say, the Trans-Indus country and the district of Taxila.<sup>2</sup>

There is another expression Śakastāna or Śakasthāna,<sup>3</sup> which originally denoted the area commonly known as Seistan. With the movement of the Śakas in the westerly direction, Śakasthāna, as according to the author of the Mathura Lion Capital,<sup>4</sup> seems to have included the entire region comprising Kamboja, Nauliḥi, Nagar and Taxila.

The Pāradaś or the Pārindaś of Aśoka's edicts have been placed in Badakshan, the region between Balkh and Dardistan.<sup>5</sup> The Nābhakas and the Nābhapaṁtis, according to Dr. Hultzsch, are to be located at Nepalese frontier of Aśoka's empire.<sup>6</sup> A mythical Buddha, according to Fahian, was believed to have been born at Na-pika near Kapilavastu.<sup>7</sup> Dr. K. P. Jayaswal, however, maintained that in the Bajaur-Swat region, we have the Nahaka community and the Nahaki pass.<sup>8</sup> Nabaka is the exact equivalent of Nābhaka, while Nāhha-paṁti denotes a league of Republicans in Gandhāra. There were two more countries, the Uḍiyana<sup>9</sup> and the Uraśa.<sup>10</sup> Uḍiyana possibly designated the whole of the hilly region south of the Hindukush from Chitral to Indus including Dardistan and portions of Swat and Yusufzal.<sup>11</sup> Uḍiyana is separate from the Uddiśa.<sup>12</sup> Uraśa is the hill region lying between the upper course of the Beas and the Indus. Its greatest part is now comprised in the Hazara district. Its capital lay a short distance to the north-east of Abbotabad in the fertile plateau

MIDDLE COUNTRY

Allahabad Stone Pillar Inscription<sup>1</sup> of Samudragupta mentions the tribes, viz., the Mālavas, Ārjunāyanas, Ābhīras, Prārjunas, Sanakānikas, Kākas and Kharaparikas, all of which may be placed in the Central India, during the fourth century A.D. The Mālavas occupied Mewar, Kota and the adjoining region.<sup>2</sup> The territory of the Ārjunāyanas cannot be located with certainty, but if the group Mālav-Ārjunāyana-Yaudheya-Madraka has been named in the record in geographical order, the country of Ārjunāyanas may be placed between Bharatpur and Eastern Rajasthan near Jaipur. The Ābhīras had many settlements in Western India. However, they had one settlement in Central India also. The country Ahirwara called after them was between Bhilsa and Jhansi in Central India. The Prārjunas are supposed to be located to the north of Vidisha, however, not very far from this city. The Sanakānikas also lived in the neighbourhood of Vidisha. A feudatory chief of this tribe recorded his gift on a Vaiṣṇava cave temple at Udayagiri, a well-known hill about two miles to the north-west of the Vidisha, during the reign of Candragupta II.<sup>3</sup> Kākapur, a village about twenty miles north of Vidisha has been identified as the ancient seat of the Kākas<sup>4</sup> while the Kharaparikas have been located in the Damoh district, Madhya Pradesh, on the basis of the mention of Kharpara in the Batihagarh Inscription.<sup>5</sup>

The Mālavas have been mentioned in the inscriptions frequently. Nandsa Yūpa inscription<sup>6</sup> places them in the south-easterly portion of Jaipur region. They are mentioned in the Athole Inscription<sup>7</sup> of Pulakeśin II, alongwith the Lāṭas and Gurjaras, who sought the protection of Pulakeśin II of their own accord. Balaghat inscription<sup>8</sup> of Pṛthvīśeṇa mentions the Mālava country alongwith Kosala and Mekala. Some of the inscriptions of the Maitraka dynasty refer to the bhukti called Mālavaka.<sup>1</sup> Inscriptions from Mandsaur repeatedly mention the practice of using the Mālava era current among them.<sup>2</sup>

Junagarh rock inscription<sup>3</sup> of Rudradāman and Nasik Prasasti<sup>4</sup> of Gautamīputra Sātakarṇi mention the name of a country called Ākarāvanti. As referred to in Junagarh inscription, it had two divisions pūrva and apara, the first represented the eastern Mālava (Daśapura) with Vidiśa as its capital and the latter the western Mālava with Ujjain as its capital. The district called Daśapura is mentioned in a Fragmentary Stone Slab inscription, discovered from Chitorgarh.<sup>5</sup> One of the Sanchi Stūpa Inscriptions<sup>6</sup> refers to Ujenihāra, i.e., the district of Ujjain. The district Madhyamā is also mentioned in the above mentioned record from Chitorgarh. It comprised the region about Nagarī in Chitorgarh district, Rajasthan. In Barnala Yūpa Inscription,<sup>7</sup> year 335, we find mention of the holy forests called Trita-vana, located in the Jaipur region. Sanchi stūpa inscription<sup>8</sup> of Candragupta II, year 93, refers to the country called Sukuli-deśa, which comprised the area around Sanchi in Bhopal district of Madhya Pradesh. An inscription from Eran mentions the viśaya called Airikīṇa,<sup>9</sup> which included the territory around Eran, situated at about four miles from Kaithora Railway Station, and five miles from Bina junction. Nasik cave inscription of Vāsīṣṭhputra Siri Pulumāyi, year 19, and the Junagarh rock inscription of Rudradāman refer to the country called Anūpa,<sup>10</sup> which comprised the region on the Narmada south of Malwa and on the other side of the Vindhya range, probably the region around ancient Māhiṣmatī, modern Mandhata or modern Maheshwar in Nimar district in Madhya Pradesh. Anūpa, lit. meaning, near the water, is a fitting name for the coastal sea board.<sup>11</sup> between the Meerpur and Noashahr, which to this day bears the name Urash or Rash.<sup>1</sup> Aśoka's edicts come from both these regions.<sup>2</sup> Another country Abhisāra,<sup>3</sup> comprised the whole tract of lower and middle hills lying between the Vitastā and Candrabhāgā.<sup>4</sup> Roughly speaking, the country corresponded to the Poonch and Noasbahr district in Jammu and Kashmir State.<sup>5</sup> The country called Kashmir is also mentioned in two Nagarjunikond inscriptions.<sup>6</sup>

The kingdoms of Nepāla and Karttputa are said to have situated on the borders of the kingdom of Samudragupta.<sup>7</sup> The kingdom of Karttputa occupied the lower range of the Himālayas, including probably Kumaon, Garhwal and Kangra. It may be mentioned here that Dr. Dasarath Sarma identifies Karttputa with Karur region between Multan and Loni in West Pakistan.<sup>8</sup>

Nagarjunikond inscriptions mention the two peoples called Cina and Cīrāta (Kīrāta)<sup>9</sup>. Cīrātas have been associated with the Yavanas, Kambojas, Gandhāras and Barbaras, all living in the Uttarāpatha.<sup>10</sup> Kīrātas are placed in the Himalayas in Tibet. Cloarajtha is stated to be the Himavata-padesa in the Pali Sāsana-varaṇsa (page 13). Vakana and Kharāsalera are the countries of Central Asia, out of the five principalities of old Ta-hia country<sup>11</sup>.

The peoples, the Yaudheyas and the Madrakas, are mentioned to have been subjugated under the suzerainty of Samudragupta.<sup>12</sup> Professor D. R. Bhandarkar locates the Yaudheyas between the Sutlej and the Jamuna, their political rule extending as far south as and including the Bharatpur region.<sup>13</sup> The site of modern Khokrakot near Rohtak, which provides many remains of ancient period, seems to be the political centre of this tribe. people and the country of the Madrakas appear in the Allahabad Stone Pillar Inscription as well as in the Mahākūṣa inscription of Maṅgaleśa.<sup>1</sup> The country roughly corresponds to Sialkot and surrounding regions between the Ravi and the Chenab, now in West Pakistan.

A stone inscription from Ayodhyā refers to the country, Kosala<sup>2</sup> which comprised the Faizabad-Bārabanki-Bābraich region of Uttar Pradesh. According to the Vāyu-Purāṇa,<sup>3</sup> Lava, the younger son of Rāma, is said to have become the ruler of north Kosala and set up his capital at Śrāvastī. In later times, north Kosala itself came to be known as Śrāvastī in order to distinguish it from south Kosala. We find mention of Śrāvastī-bhukti in Madhuban plate<sup>4</sup> of Harṣa, year 25. Śrāvastī also occurs in Nalanda Brick Inscriptions.<sup>5</sup> The bhukti comprised the territory round about Sahet-Mahet, which lies on the borders of Gonda and Bahraich districts in Uttar Pradesh. According to Hsien-tsang, the country had good crops, and an equable climate.<sup>6</sup> Fa-Hien also refers the old Vihāra of Mahāpajāpati Gotamī built in the region of Śrāvastī.<sup>7</sup> Madhuban plate mentions a district called Kuṇḍadhāni, situated in Śrāvastī. It is not possible to locate the exact boundaries of this district.

Banskhera plates<sup>8</sup> of Harṣa refers to another bhukti called Ahicchatra and the viṣaya, Aṅgadīya, situated in this very bhukti. The bhukti comprised the eastern part of Rohilkhand. Aṅgadīya-viṣaya probably comprised the region round Ramnagar in Bareilly district, Uttar Pradesh. The Ahicchatra country, according to Hsien-tsang, was more than three thousand li in circuit. It yielded grain and had many woods and springs and a genial climate.<sup>9</sup>

Indor Copper Plate Inscription<sup>10</sup> of Skandagupta, (Gupta) year 146 mentions the country Antaryvedī. The country lay between the Gaṅgā and the Yamunā. It comprised the territory extending

The Cedi kingdom is mentioned in Hāthīgumphā inscription<sup>1</sup> of Khāravela. It corresponds roughly to the modern Bundelkhand and the adjoining region. It was an important centre of Buddhism.<sup>2</sup> Khoh grant<sup>3</sup> of Saṃkṣobha, year 209, and Betul plates<sup>4</sup> of Saṃkṣobha, year 199, mention the hereditary kingdom Ḍabhālā, or Ḍahālā, which corresponds to modern Bundelkhand. The Ḍabhālā country was almost co-extensive with the boundaries of present Jabalpur district to the north and extended to about one hundred twenty miles from Tripurī (Tewar) town, the villages (Patpara and Dwara) being situated midway between Tripurī town and boundary of Ḍabhālā kingdom. The vīṣaya of Tripurī is also mentioned in Betul plates<sup>5</sup> of Saṃkṣobha. It comprised the region around present Tewar, six miles from Jabalpur in Madhya Pradesh.

Karitalai copper plate inscription<sup>6</sup> of Jayanātha, year 174, refers to division (santaka) called Nāgadeya, which may be identical with Nagaudh in Baghelkhand.<sup>7</sup> Dr. Fleet, however, points out that Nagaudh seem to be derived from Nāga-vadha or Nāga-bandha, and not from Nāgadeya.<sup>8</sup> Another division of Baghelkhand was known as Voṭa-santika,<sup>9</sup> the identification of which is not certain. Maṇināga-petha was comparatively a smaller division.<sup>10</sup> Dārāmaṇḍala-pradeśa and Durggamaṇḍala-pradeśa<sup>11</sup> were probably the names of some towns and it is not certain that they denoted the region around them. All these places, however, should be located in Baghelkhand.

WESTERN COUNTRY

Junagarh Rock Inscription<sup>12</sup> of Rudradāman refers to the countries, Sindhu and Sauvīra. The former is mentioned also in Kanheri plate<sup>1</sup> of the Traikūṣakas, year 245 and in Bedirur grant<sup>2</sup> of Koṅgaṇī Mahādhirāja Bhūvikrama, śaka year 556. The ancient Sindhu-deśa lay to the west of the lower Indus. Sauvīra, as Alberuni clearly states, corresponded to Multan and Jahraṇar to the east of the Indus.<sup>3</sup> The joint application of the two names, Sindhu and Sauvīra, comprehended the whole of modern Sind, including a portion of the coastal regions of south Rajasthan<sup>4</sup>.

Another country, Niṣāda,<sup>5</sup> mentioned in the Rudradāman's inscription may be placed between the Sindh and the Pāriyātra (Western Vindhya).<sup>6</sup> Dr. Sircar equates it with the region about the Western Vindhya and Aravalli range.<sup>7</sup> Earlier, however, the people of Niṣāda occupied the districts of Hissar and Bhatnir,<sup>8</sup> Marwar or Jodhpur.<sup>9</sup>

The country called Kukura is mentioned between Surāṣṭra and Aparānta in the Nasik Prasasti,<sup>10</sup> and between Sindhu-Sauvīra and Aparānta in the Junagarh inscription.<sup>11</sup> Brhat-Saṃhitā<sup>12</sup> mentions the countries Kukura and Pāriyātra side by side. Candravalli inscription<sup>13</sup> mentions the country called Pāriyātrika, which has been identified on the evidence of Yuan Chwang, who describes this country as situated 500 li west of Mathura, and 800 li south-east of Śatadru, with Dairat to the north-east of Ajmer and the Aravalli hills. About Kukura, we can say that it included parts of Western Rajasthan and North Kathiawar.<sup>14</sup>

The Ābhiras have been mentioned both as a country and as a people in the early inscriptions from second century A. D. onwards. The Gunda Inscription<sup>15</sup> of 180 A.D. belonging to the region of Rudrasimha I records the digging of tank by an Ābhīra general, Rudrabhūti. Shortly afterwards in about 236 A.D. a native of Ābhīra named Īśvaradatta held the office of Mahākṣatrapa, which is known to us by his silver coins found in Kathiawar. This Īśvaradatta is generally connected with the Ābhīra dynasty of Īśvarasena of the Nasik inscription<sup>1</sup> of 257 A.D. It is held that the Śaka Satraps of Western India were shadowed by this Ābhīra king Īśvarasena. Another Ābhīra ruler Vasuṣeṇa is known to us from a Nāgārjunikoṇḍa Inscription<sup>2</sup> of the year 30. The tribal state of Ābhīra is also mentioned in the Allahabad Stone Pillar Inscription<sup>3</sup> of Samudragupta. Moreover, Candravalli inscription<sup>4</sup> of Mayūraśarman records the annexation, inter-alia, the Ābhīra country also by the ruler of Kadamba family. The inscriptional evidence places the Ābhīras in Gujarat and Maharashtra States in about the third century A.D. The Ābhīras, in the 5th century, succeeded in overpowering even the Āndhras. Nāgārjunikoṇḍa inscription gives a clear indication of Ābhīra kingdom in Andhra Pradesh. The Purāṇas, which mention them as Āndhrabhṛtyas, bear a testimony to it. The country of the Ābhīras is mentioned as Abiria in the Geography of Ptolemy.<sup>5</sup> Abiria corresponded to the central portion of Sindh above the delta of that river.

The Gurjara country is mentioned in the Aihole inscription<sup>6</sup> of Pulakeśin II. The battle between Harṣa and Pulakeśin II was probably fought on the bank of the Narmadā in the heart of the Gurjara kingdom.<sup>7</sup> Several inscriptions of the Gurjaras have been discovered in Western India between the Kim and the Mahi.<sup>8</sup>

We find mention of two districts (pathaka) Udumbaragartā and Dāsīlakapalli in the grants<sup>9</sup> of Subandhu. The headquarters of the former district has been identified with Umarbar, a small village on the western border of the Barwani district, Madhya Pradesh, and of the latter with Deswalia, about fourteen miles

Junagarh rock inscription<sup>1</sup> of Rudradāman mentions the districts of Ānarta and Surāṣṭra, Śvabhra, Maru and Kaccha. Śvabhra has been identified with the region round Sābarmatī, flowing near Ahmedabad in Gujarat. The original name of the river is said to be Śvabhravatī (full of caverns).<sup>2</sup> Maru perhaps denoted the territory of Marwar in Rajasthan. Kaccha is identical with modern Cutch. It is mentioned by Pāṇini as an anutamudra dvīpa.<sup>3</sup> This agrees with its reference in the lexicon of Hemacandra to illustrate what is anuponvṛṇān, i.e., a tract of land near water.<sup>4</sup>

The country, Ānarta, is supposed to stand for Northern Gujarat including the part of Kathiawar, which extended up to Ahmedabad in the South.<sup>5</sup> The country is said to have obtained its name from an eponymous ancestor Ānarta.<sup>6</sup> In some of the grants of the rulers of Maitraka dynasty, there are references to Ānartapura, which is generally identified with Vadnagar in Northern Gujarat.<sup>7</sup> However, Ānartapura is identified with Dwaraka also, lying under the shadow of the Raivataka.<sup>8</sup>

Surāṣṭra originally stood for the South-western Kathiawar. The name was well suited to this region because of its natural fertility of the land. Nasik inscription<sup>9</sup> of Pulumāyī uses the Prakrit form Surāṭha. In the grants of Maitraka dynasty, Surāṣṭra is repeatedly mentioned.<sup>10</sup> Junagarh rock inscription<sup>11</sup> of Skandagupta throws light on the importance of the outlying province of Surāṣṭra of the Gupta Emperors.

talūq of Bhavnagar district) Kauṇḍinyapura-ṣṭaya<sup>1</sup> (region around Kauṇḍinyapura, thirty two miles west of Junagarh and thirty five miles east of Porbandar), and Vardhamāna-bhukti<sup>2</sup> (Vaḍhavana) were the main constituents of Surāṣṭra during the rule of Maitraka dynasty. Surāṣṭra also included two pathakas, Kālapaka<sup>3</sup> (Kalwad in Jamnagar district) and Ghāsarakā<sup>4</sup> (Ghasari, 5 miles south-west of Kesad). The term sthalī appears to be more common in Surāṣṭra. In all, names of the sixteen sthalīs of Surāṣṭra are found to have been recorded in the grants of Maitraka dynasty. These are Bilvakhāta<sup>5</sup> (Bilvakha, thirty two miles west of Jhar), Jharī<sup>6</sup> (Jhar in Amreli district), Vajrapallikā<sup>7</sup> (the triangular tract between Goras, Lusdi and Katpur in the Mahuva talūq of Bhavnagar district) Dhārakheta<sup>8</sup> (near Hathab in Bhavnagar district), Bāra-Vapa<sup>9</sup> (Vanthali, an important place in Junagarh), Śiṅabarataka<sup>10</sup> (Simarana, seven miles north of Kundala), Vāṇanagara<sup>11</sup> (Vadadar, ten miles to the north of Vanthali), Jambuvānara<sup>12</sup> (Jambuvanara, nine miles north-east of Navanagar and four miles from Jambura river), Ambareṇu<sup>13</sup> (Ambarana, twenty miles north-east of Dharol in Jamnagar district, or Ambardi on the Phosphal river, which is about fourteen miles north-west of Virpura in Rajkot district), Ānumaṣṭī<sup>14</sup> (Amreli), Ariṣṭijikā,<sup>15</sup> Kadambapadra,<sup>16</sup> Nimbakūpa,<sup>17</sup> Puṣyā-

Draṅga and Peṭha are the smaller administrative units in the administration of Maitraka dynasty. Three grants<sup>4</sup> refer to a draṅga called maṇḍali, the headquarters of this draṅga may have been at Maṇḍala, about three miles west of Lusdi in Mahuva district, Gujarat. A peṭha called Dipanaka was situated in Bilva-khātasthali.<sup>5</sup> The peṭha seems to be larger than a grāma, but smaller than a sthalī. Draṅga was a similar term, which included a number of villages under its jurisdiction.

In addition to the sixteen sthalīs, Kheṭaka was another district (āhāra) under the Maitraka rule.<sup>6</sup> It roughly corresponded to Kaira district in Gujarat. Kheṭakāhāra had five pathakas, (1) Bandari-Jindri<sup>7</sup> (Barejadi, a railway station between Ahmedabad and Mehmudabad), (2) Kolamba<sup>8</sup> (a portion of Mehmudabad taluq in Ahmedabad district), (3) Koṇaka<sup>9</sup> (Kuna, about six miles to the north-east of Ahmedabad and two miles to the south of Ghodasara), (4) Nāgaraka<sup>10</sup> (Nagara, two miles north of Cambay and twenty two miles away of Kaira), (5) Sīmhapallikā<sup>11</sup> (Sīhoda, five miles away to the south of Desai in Baroda district). These pathakas give a clear indication that the territory of Kheṭakāhāra comprised the modern district Kaira and some portions of the district of Baroda in the east and Ahmedabad in the west.

Lāṭa was another ancient division of Gujarat.<sup>12</sup> It normally comprised the region between the Mahi in the North and Daman in the South. It included the districts Kaira, Broach and Surat of Gujarat and parts of Thana in Maharashtra. In its narrower connotation it, however, comprised parts of modern districts of Broach and Kaira in Gujarat. According to a Mandsaur record, the district (viṣaya) of Lāṭa was beautiful with trees full of flowers, mountains covered with vegetation and the temples and assembly halls of Gods with rihāras. The people of this land were fond of Silk and the region developed a Silk-weaving industry as early as the fifth century A.D. Generally, these weavers were religious-minded. Some of them were worshippers of the Sun. The people of Lāṭa are said to have possessed different artistic traits. It has been suggested that for artistic traits revealed from frescoes in caves XVI-XVII at Ajanta, the credit should be given to the artists and their patrons coming from Lāṭa.

Gangaridae people, which have been referred to by the classical writers. Vaṅga is mentioned as having been converted to Buddhism by monks hailing from Ceylon in a Nāgārjunikoṇḍa inscription<sup>1</sup> of the 3rd century A.D. Mehrauli Iron Pillar Inscription<sup>2</sup> presents king Candrar kneeling and turning back with his breast to the enemies who uniting together had come against him in the Vaṅga countries. In the Mahābhārata, the Vaṅgas are mentioned along with the Kalīṅgas, Tāmrāliptas and Puṇḍras of Eastern India. Raghu is said to have come to the Vaṅga country after having conquered the kingdom of the Suhmas. In this land were to be found islets scattered in the streams of the Gaṅgā where the people fought in their boats.<sup>3</sup> Vaṅga is directly connected with the territory known as Samatāṣa, which is mentioned for the first time in the Allabād Prasasti<sup>4</sup> of Samudragupta as border kingdom grouped with Davāka, Kāmarūpa and others. The Chinese traveller Hiuen-tsang is said to have reached this Vaṅga country after having travelled a distance of 1200 li to the south of Kāmarūpta.<sup>5</sup> From Samatāṣa, he proceeded to Tāmrālipta, which lay to its west. Dr. Smith suggested that Samatāṣa comprised the south-eastern part of the Bengal corresponding to the Dacca, Farīdpur, Backerganj, Jessor and Khulna districts.<sup>6</sup> It was taken just identical to the country called the Vaṅgas. However, Dr. N. K. Bhattasali showed his disagreement to it. According to him, it comprised the modern districts of Sylhet, Tippera and Noakhali, as well as the eastern half of the Mymensingh district and a narrow strip from the eastern side of the present Dacca district.<sup>7</sup> It is certain that Samatāṣa was an essentially descriptive term, which has long passed out of vogue. It was an appropriate name for the country of which the rivers have flat and level banks, of equal heights on both sides. It is interesting to note that according to Hiuen-tsang, Samatāṣa was a low and moist country, which had a soft and agreeable climate.<sup>8</sup> grants<sup>1</sup> of Samācāradeva, comprised the region round Kotalipada in the present district of Faridpur, almost in the heart of what was anciently known as Vaṅga. The reference to Uttara-Maṇḍala in Gunaighar grant<sup>2</sup> suggests the existence of an administrative area comprised within an unnamed viṣaya or bhukti corresponding to a maṇḍala in the northern part of the kingdom indicated by the inscription and implying a maṇḍala in the southern part as well.

The country, Puṇḍravardhana, was bounded by the main stream of the Gaṅgā, on the west and the river Karatoyā on the east. It was in the possession of the Guptas from the second quarter of the 5th to about the middle of the 6th century A.D.<sup>3</sup> The country included Malda, Dinajpur, Rajshahi and portions of the Bogra & Rangpur districts, situated to the west of the Karatoyā. Four out of the five grants of the Gupta period discovered from Damodarpur refer to the sub-division Koṣṭivarṣa-viṣaya of Puṇḍravardhana-bhukti.<sup>4</sup> Abhidhāna Cintāmaṇi of Hemacandra gives Devikoṣa, Umāvana, Bāṇapura and Śoṇitapura as synonyms of Kotivarṣa. There is still a place in Dinajpur, which is known as Bana-nagar of Bangarh, whence a copper-plate grant<sup>5</sup> of Mahāpala was also discovered. Kotivarṣa-viṣaya, on the evidence of inscriptions of Pala dynasty, seems to have extended gradually its jurisdiction to the southern part of Dinajpur district, northern portion of Rajshahi and probably also the eastern tracts of Bogra district. However, in the fifth century A.D., it did not comprise the portion of Bogra district, where Pāñcanagarī was the centre of a separate administrative division. Baigram plates<sup>6</sup> of the Gupta year 128 refers to some kumārāmātya, who communicated with the authorities of Vāyigrāma (Baigram in Bogra district) from Pāñcanagarī, which appears to have been the headquarters of the area administered by him. Another viṣaya, which is doubtfully assigned to the Puṇḍravardhana-bhukti, is supplied by the Dhanai-daba grant<sup>7</sup> of Kumāragupta I, Gupta year 113. The name of the district mentioned in the grant cannot be read with certainty. It may be either Mnhākhasapara, Khada(ta)para or Khasapara.

Several inscriptions refer to another type of administrative area to which the name vīthi is given. Sultanpur<sup>1</sup> and Kalaikuri<sup>2</sup> copper plates mention the name of Śṛṅgavera-vīthi. Professor Sircar finds the name preserved in that of Singra Police Station in the Natore sub-division of the same district.<sup>3</sup> Mr. Niradbandhu Sanyal identifies it with Singahar, twenty miles to the south-west of Mahasthan in Bogra district. A sub-division called Gohālī-maṇḍala of Śṛṅgavera-vīthi is recorded in the Sultanpur grant<sup>4</sup>. About seven miles to the east of Singahara in Bogra district is a village called Gohālī, which seems to represent the ancient headquarters of the Gohālī-maṇḍala. Another vīthi called Dakṣiṇāśaka is recorded in the Paharpur grant.<sup>5</sup> It appears to have been under the jurisdiction of Puṇḍravardhana. Nāgiraṭṭa-maṇḍala mentioned in the grant seems to have been included in the Dakṣiṇāśaka-vīthi.

The earliest epigraphic reference to the country Karṇasuvarṇa appears in Vappaghoṣa grant<sup>6</sup> of Jayanāga of the 6th century A.D. The Nidhanpur grant<sup>7</sup> of Bhāskaravarman of first half of the 7th century A.D. also refers to it. Haraha inscription<sup>8</sup> of Išānavarman, 554 A.D., and Dubi Plates<sup>9</sup> of Bhāskaravarman mention Gauḍa in place of Karṇasuvarṇa. Haraha inscription speaks of the Gauḍas as having been compelled to be a Samudrāśraya, that is a people whose shelter is sea.<sup>10</sup> The Chinese pilgrim Hiuen-tsang speaks of Karṇasuvarṇa as the name of the capital of kingdom of king Śaśāṅka, who killed Rājyavardhana of Thanesar in 605 A.D. In Harṣacarita of Bāṇa, this king is, however, described as the Lord of Gauḍa,<sup>11</sup> Gauḍa seems to be the usual name of the kingdom of Karṇasuvarṇa apparently so named by the Chinese traveller after the name of the capital of that kingdom. The celebrated Buddhist monastery called Rakṣamṛtikā-vihāra is said to have stood on the suburbs of the city of Karnasuvarṇa. The monastery has been located at modern Rāṅgā-māṣi, about eleven miles to the south of Murshidabad.<sup>1</sup> The Karnasuvarṇa or Gauḍa country is, therefore, to be located about the present Murshidabad district, bounded in the north by the river Padma and in the south by Burdwan district. Under the jurisdiction of Karnasuvarṇa, a viṣaya called Audamvarika is known to us from the Vappaghoṣavāta inscription<sup>2</sup> of Jayanāga of 6th century A.D. The viṣaya seems to represent some dominion governed by a feudatory.

Mallasarūl copper plate<sup>3</sup> of Vijayasena refers to Vardhamāna-bhukti, which is represented by modern district of Burdwan in West Bengal. The above grant also mentions a smaller administrative unit known as Vakkattaka-vīthi representing a part of Vardhamāna-bhukti. The vīthi is said to have included a strip of country along the north bank of Damodar river. The name of the vīthi seems to have survived in Bakta, a place immediately to the east of Gohagrāma.

Midnapore grants<sup>4</sup> of Śaśāṅka of the year 8 and 19 are the earliest epigraphic records which refer to Daṇḍabhukti, a territorial sub-division, probably created by the mighty Gauḍa ruler during his campaign of the Southern territories. Daṇḍabhukti comprised the area round Danton in Midnapore district. In course of time, Daṇḍabhukti was incorporated into the Vardhamānabhukti, but the suffix bhukti was not discontinued. In Irda Copper Plate grant<sup>5</sup> of 10th century A.D., Daṇḍabhukti-maṇḍala is recorded as comprised within the Vardhamāna-bhukti. Daṇḍabhukti included the Southern part of Midnapore district. Midnapore grant<sup>6</sup> also refers to Keṭakapadrikā-deśa, about whose location, we are not certain.

After dealing with the different territories of Bengal, a mention of Sadivamṅgiyas, the confederate clans in East Bengal, would not be out of place here. The name of the people occurs in Mauryan Brahmi inscription<sup>1</sup> discovered from Mahasthan. Just as in the time of the Buddha, the capital of the Sathvajit confederacy was Vaiśālī, which was the headquarters not of the Vajjis, but of the Licchavis, who were then prominent, it seems that in the time of present inscription, the capital of the Saṁvāmgiyas was Puṇḍranagara, which was the headquarters, not of the Vaṅgiyas, but of the Puṇḍras, after whom it was undoubtedly called Puṇḍranagara.<sup>2</sup>

As already mentioned Kāmarūpa and Ḍavāka were the border-kingdoms of the Gupta empire; in the fourth century A.D. The kingdom of Kāmarūpa comprised a part of the Assam Valley. The country Kāmarūpa was marked by the river Karatoyā from time immemorial.<sup>3</sup> It is to be placed in and about the Gauhati region of Assam. Nidhanpur copper plate<sup>4</sup> inscription of Bhāskaravarman also refers to the kingdom of Kāmarūpa. The Chinese traveller Hiuen-tsang reached here after crossing the river Karatoyā, while travelling from the borders of Puṇḍravarḍhana to Kāmarūpa.<sup>5</sup> The country Kāmarūpa was also known by the name Prāgjyotiṣa. A seal of the Duli plates<sup>6</sup> of Bhāskaravarman used the attribute prāg-jyotiṣendra, that is, 'Lord of Prāg-jyotiṣa' for the Assam ruler Puṣyavarman, whose accession may approximately be placed about 350 A.D. It is interesting to note that a line of Shahi kings ruling in the hilly region of Gilgit, about the 6th century A.D. is described as belonging to the family of Bhagadatta,<sup>7</sup> who was the ruler of Prāgjyotiṣa in the time of the Mahābhārata,<sup>8</sup> and who fought with a great army of Cīnas and Kirātas.<sup>9</sup> Prāgjyotiṣa is also mentioned among the prācya Janapadas in different Purāṇas.<sup>10</sup> A viṣaya called Candrapur is mentioned in the Nidhanpur copper plates of Bhāskaravarman.<sup>11</sup> The viṣaya is identified by Dr. N. K. Bhattasali by the modern district of Sylhet.<sup>1</sup> He refers to a village Chandrapur on the left bank of Kusiara. Mr. K. M. Gupta informs about nine or ten places called Chandpur within a radius of about twenty miles from Sylhet.<sup>2</sup> Padmanath Bhattacharya, however, locates the viṣaya in Rangpur.<sup>3</sup>

The kingdoms of Magadha and Aṅga and also the portions of the states of Kosala and Vāṅga are known to us from the inscriptions. Some seals of the Gupta period have been discovered from the Vaiśālī region with inscriptions addressed to the officers incharge of Tirabhukti. This bhukti is said to have been situated in the adjoining tract of the Gandak and Gaṅgā whence the whole region derived its name. It seems to have comprised modern Tirhut division excluding the Saran district, but including Purnea and Saharsa districts. Vaiśālī (Basarh in the Muzaffarpur district) was the chief town of this bhukti.

The kingdom of Magadha is known to us from the inscriptions, which cover an extensive period right from the third century B.C. to the first quarter of the 7th century A.D.<sup>4</sup> It comprised modern districts of Patna, Gaya and North-Western Hazaribagh and a portion of Bhagalpur district also. It was bounded on the North by the Gaṅgā, on the West by Śoṇa, on the East by Champa and on the South by the Northern fringe of the Hazaribagh district. The river Gaṅgā separated it from the state of Licchavis.<sup>5</sup> The inhabitants of the Gaya district still call it as Maga or Magah.<sup>6</sup>

A clay seal inscribed in the Gupta characters of 6th century A.D. and discovered from Nalanda mentions the district Nagara-bhukti.<sup>7</sup> The name of the district is indicative of the name of the celebrated city of Pāṭaliputra (Patna).<sup>8</sup> Under the jurisdiction of Nagara-bhukti, a viṣaya called Valavi is mentioned in Deo-Baranark inscription<sup>9</sup> of Jivitagupta II of first half of the seventh century A.D. The viṣaya corresponded to the modern district of Sahabad in Bihar.

Candravalli Inscription<sup>1</sup> of Mayūraśarman refers to a country called Maukari or Maukhari. The country under reference seems to comprise the territory around the town of Gaya in South Bihar. Another sub-division called Ajapura-naya<sup>2</sup> fell within the viṣaya of Rājagṛha.<sup>3</sup> The headquarters of the sub-division have been located at Ajapur situated not far from Nalanda in Patna.<sup>4</sup> There are several large tanks and a mound at the site of modern Ajapur.

The kingdom of Aṅga was quite adjacent to that of Magadha. It has been mentioned for the first time in the Hathigumpha inscription<sup>5</sup> of Khāravala. Mahākūṭa inscription<sup>6</sup> of Maṅgaleśa also mentions it. It comprised the present districts of Bhagalpur and Monghyr with a portion of Santhal Paraganas. However, its limits have been varied from time to time. The natural boundary on the north was the Gaṅgā and according to the Campeya-Jātaka<sup>7</sup> the river Campā flowed between the states of Magadha and Aṅga and thus formed the latter's western boundary.

The spurious Nalanda plate of Samudragupta which possibly belongs to 6th or 7th century A.D., mentions the Kṛmīlā-viṣaya, which probably covered the area round modern Kiul, the Western part of the Monghyr district.<sup>8</sup> Nandapur copper plate<sup>9</sup> of Gupta year 169 describes the Nanda-vīthi, which has been identified with the territory of Nandapur lying on the Southern bank of Gaṅgā, atleast two miles to the north-east of Surajgarh in the district of Monghyr.

SOUTHERN COUNTRY

The Southern Country can easily be sub-divided into four regions, (1) Eastern Deccan (Kosala, Maḥākāntāra, Kāliṅga, Āndhra, Tiriliṅga and Veṅḡ), (2) Central Deccan (Vidarbha, Vatsagulma, Bhogavardhana, Mulaka, Asaka, Asika), (3) Western Deccan (Nāsika, Aparānta, Koṅkaṇa, Mahārāṣṭra, Karmāṣa, Kuntala, Gaṅgavādī) and (4) Far South (Kerala and Tamila). We shall take each of the four regions separately in the following pages.

1. EASTERN DECCAN

Kosala finds first mention among the kingdoms of Dakṣiṇā-patha mentioned in the Allahabad Pillar Inscription<sup>1</sup> of Samudragupta. It comprised the districts of Bilaspur and Raipur of Madhya Pradesh and Sambalpur of Orissa. Balaghat plates<sup>2</sup> of Prthivīṣeṇa II claim the overlordships of Vākātaka ruler Narendrasena over the kingdom of Kosala. Ajanta cave inscription<sup>3</sup> also refers to the Kosala country. In the Rajim and Baloda plates<sup>4</sup>, Mahāśīva-Tivararāja is styled as the Lord of Kosala. Adhabhara plates<sup>5</sup> of Mahā-Nannārāja seem to refer to the vast territories, which fell under the jurisdiction of Sakala-Kosala. The country is grouped with Mekala in some of the inscriptions.<sup>6</sup> Sometimes Mekala is associated with the country of Utkala<sup>7</sup>. Mekala is also mentioned in Bamhani Plates<sup>8</sup> of Bharatabala. The province of Mekala extended from the South of present Maikala range in a straight line covering the modern state of Bastar wherein begins the Andhra country. Maikal range is the outer wall of the Satpura, bounding Chhattisgarh on the west and north.

Bamhani plates<sup>9</sup> refer to the viṣaya of Pañcagartā. The viṣaya indicates the country around Bamhani in Sohagpur Tahsil of Rewa district. The region Pañcagartā was watered by five rivulets, probably the five of the tributaries of the river Son. The present village of Pachgaon, three miles south of Sahdol possibly represents the headquarters of ancient district of Pañcagartā.

There is another country, Pūrva-rāṣṭra<sup>1</sup>, so called due to its lying on the east of the Maikala range. The country lay to the east of the capital of Dakṣiṇa Kosala, is the view of Professor D. C. Sircar<sup>2</sup>. Pūrvarāṣṭra included Tuṇḍrabhukti,<sup>3</sup> which corresponds to the Northern portion of the Raipur district, specially to the region round Baloda Bazar tahsil. There is another district, 'Tuḍā-rāṣṭra', the headquarters of which may be identical with either one of the villages known as Tunda, Tundra, Tundri or Tundra-gaon in the vicinity of Sheorinarayana,<sup>4</sup> or with the village Tera or Tora in the Sarangarh region<sup>5</sup>. Another country (bhukti) called Tosaḍḍa<sup>6</sup> is represented by the region around Tusda near Dumarpalli, about thirty miles to the South-east of Arang.

There are five viṣayas, which belonged to the Kosala country. These constituted the different parts of the districts of Raipur and Bilaspur. These are Aṣṭadvāra<sup>7</sup> (Adhabhara, about forty miles from Bilaspur), Doṇḍā<sup>8</sup> (Dunda, twenty five miles of Arang in Raipur district), Koṣṭra-Nandapura<sup>9</sup> (Nandapura in Sakti tahsil, Bilaspur district), Lāyoḍḍaka<sup>10</sup> (Lara, about ten miles north-east of Bonda), Navyāṣṭi<sup>11</sup> (probably denotes some administrative unit consisting of eighty-nine villages).

Allahabad Stone Pillar Inscription<sup>6</sup> mentions the Mahākāntāra kingdom after Kosala. Mahākāntāra extended northwards into Ganjam agency and westward into Chhatisgarh region.<sup>7</sup> The kingdom is called as Mahāvana in two Amaravati inscriptions.<sup>8</sup>

The Kalinga country is referred to by Aśoka and the Hāthīgumphā inscription of Khāravēla.<sup>9</sup> Both these references indicate that Kalinga was a seat of an independent kingdom from the third century B.C. onwards. The references to Tosali (Dhauḷi) and Samāpā (Jaugada) in the Kalinga edicts of Aśoka indicate that during Aśoka's reign, the Mahanadi-Risikulya Valley formed a part of Kalinga. Later on, the rulers of the Gaṅga dynasty describe themselves in their records as having acquired the sovereignty of Sakala-Kalinga by moving their swords.<sup>10</sup> After an analysis of their epigraphic records, we may say that Kalinga or Sakala-Kalinga, during their times, stretched along the eastern coast, from the Ganjam district in the north to the Godavari district in the south as far as the river of that name. The rulers enjoying the title kaliṅgādhipati sometimes even claimed Lordship over the whole coast land between the Mahanadi and the Krishna.<sup>11</sup>

Jirjīngi and Ponnuturu grants<sup>12</sup> describe Indravarman I as the lord of Tri-kalinga. It appears that the terms Sakala-Kalinga and Tri-Kalinga were synonymous. The title tri-kaliṅgādhipati has been assumed by different ruling families both in the north and south of the Mahānadī and the Tailavāha or the river Tel.<sup>1</sup> Trikalīṅga, thus, comprised the entire region between the Risikulya river with the Zamindari of Jeypore in Koraput district and the districts of Bastar, Bolangir, Kalahandi and Sambalpur.<sup>2</sup> It included the northern regions of Kaliṅga, the western regions of Eastern Ghats, the Malayagiri area of Ganjam district and northern part of Bastar.<sup>3</sup> Its northern frontier was the river Mahānadī in Kosala, the north-eastern boundary was Kaṅgoda and the eastern frontier was sea. It may be mentioned here that Gīri-Kaliṅga of the Pedda-dugam plates<sup>4</sup> of Śātrudaman was probably identical with the country called Trikalīṅga.

From an analysis of epigraphic records, we find that since the later part of the 6th century A.D., the kingdoms in the Ganjam-Puri-Cuttack-Balasore region assumed different names, such as Kaṅgoda, Tosali, Utkala and Uḍra etc. Kaṅgoda or Koṅgoda<sup>5</sup> comprised the region bounded by the river Mahānadī on the north and Risikulya on the south.<sup>6</sup> It included southern Puri and Ganjam districts.<sup>7</sup> Śaśāṅka, the king of Gauḍa, is said to have extended his suzerainty as far as Koṅgoda in the first quarter of the seventh century A.D.<sup>8</sup> The term Uḍra<sup>9</sup> previously indicated the Balasore region, but afterwards, being a synonym of Utkala-deśa or Utkala-maṇḍala,<sup>10</sup> the Cuttack-Puri-Ganjam area. The Utkala country is supposed to have comprised the present Balasore district of Orissa, together with parts of Cuttack district of that state and of the Midnapore district of West Bengal. According to Raghuvamśa,<sup>11</sup> the eastern boundary of Utkala seems to have extended to the river Kapīśā, modern Kasai, running through the Midnapore district.

prove that with the expansion of the Vighrahas in the fourth quarter of the sixth century A.D., the south-western part of the coastal Orissa came to be known as Dakṣiṇa-Tosali,<sup>1</sup> and the alternative name Uttara-Tosali<sup>2</sup> went to the country of the Utkalas. Soro Plate<sup>3</sup> of Somadatta records the name of the country Sarephāhāra and that of the sub-division (viśaya) Vārukāṇa, which belonged to it. The town Sarephā has been identified with Soro in Balasore district, while Vārukāṇa is taken to be identical with Barua Pargana.<sup>4</sup> Uttamāloka and Utiḍa,<sup>5</sup> the two sub-divisions (viśaya) of Dakṣiṇa-Tosali have not been located so far.

Kurāḷa, Kottūra, Eraṇḍapalli, and Devarāṣṭra are the four kingdoms of Dakṣiṇāpatha mentioned in the prāśasti of Samudragupta, which may be located in the Kaliṅga country. Kurāḷa or Kaurāḷa comprised the part of Ganjam district to the north of Mahendragiri.<sup>6</sup> Recently it has been identified with Kulada in the Ghumsur taluq of the Ganjam district. Inscriptions belonging to the Māṣhara, Vāsiṣṭha and other families mention the names of many districts. These are Bhiliṅga-bhoga<sup>7</sup> (Bhiliṅgi, about five miles distant from Baranga in Berhampur sub-division), Dāghapañcālī<sup>8</sup> (region around Ponnuturu), Devanna-pañcālī<sup>9</sup> (near Parlakimedi), Khalgukhapḍa<sup>10</sup> (Khallikot), Korasoḍaka-pañcālī<sup>11</sup> (Koroshanda, six miles south of Parlakimedi), Kṛṣṇagiri<sup>12</sup> (Kṛṣṇagiri hill in Khallikota, four miles to the east of Phasi in Attagada), Nḍaḍaśṛṅga or Jeḍaśṛṅga,<sup>13</sup> Padma-kholī<sup>14</sup> (Khallikot), Parakkala-mārga<sup>15</sup> (Pankala Mutha in Khallikota talug), Vonkhara-bhoga<sup>1</sup> (region around Jirjingi near Tekkali) and Pratiṣṭhāna.<sup>2</sup> All these territorial units are to be located in the present Ganjam district, Orissa. The name reminds us of the village Tampoyaka, mentioned in Koraṣoḍaka plates.<sup>4</sup> Eraṇḍapalli kingdom of Samudragupta praśasti has been located at Erandol near Srikakulam.<sup>5</sup> It has also been identified with Yendipalli in Visakhapatnam district.<sup>6</sup> The kingdom of Devarāṣṭra, which is also mentioned in Srungavarapukota plates<sup>7</sup> of Anantavarman, comprised the taluqs of Anakapalle and Srungavarapukota in Visakhapatnam district and the talug of Srikakulam in the district of the same name. Kharapurī-Madamba, a territorial sub-division, was situated in the country, Devarāṣṭra.<sup>8</sup> It may be identified with the Yellamanchili region. Srikakulam in Srikakulam district) are the names of the different territorial divisions, which may be located in Srikakulam and Visakhapatnam districts of Andhra Pradesh. Varāha-vartanī and Kroṣṭuka-vartanī seem to be so named owing to the profusion of bears and jackals in those regions. Dr. Stenkonow, however, proposes to locate Varāha-vartanī in the region along the course of the Varāha-nadī, which rises in the Golugonda hills to the north of Narasannapeta and flows into Bengal at Vatad.<sup>1</sup>

Hariṣeṇa, the author of the Samudragupta Prastāśī, mentions the kingdom of Piṣṭapura, which is further mentioned in inscriptions relating to the dynasty of the Vāsiṣṭhas and in the Aihole inscription of Pulakeśin II.<sup>2</sup> Piṣṭapura is identical with Pithapuram in the East Godavari district. The districts, Guddavāḍī, also known as Gudda or Guddāḍī<sup>3</sup> (Rajole and Ramachandrapuram taluqs), Pāgunāra,<sup>4</sup> known as Pāgunavara in later records<sup>5</sup> (comprised Narasapur taluq, near Drakṣharam in Ramachandrapuram taluq), Tālipāka<sup>6</sup> (Tatipaka in Rajole taluq), Cīkura<sup>7</sup> (Sarabhavaram in Chodavaram division) are all to be located in the East Godavari district, Andhra Pradesh.

Samudragupta Prastāśī also refers to the Veṅgī kingdom. The kingdom is also mentioned in the Kaneru and Konukollu grants<sup>8</sup> of Skandavarman. It comprised the whole area between Mahendra mountain in Kaliṅga & the Manneru river in Nellore, its western boundary ran in general along the foot of the Eastern Ghats. The viṣaya called Veṅgī included the taluqs of Ellore, Ernagudem and Bhimavaram. Another viṣaya called Kudrāhāra, Kudūrāhāra or Gudrāhāra included the Dandar, Gudivada, Avanigadda and Kaijalura taluqs of Krishna district, Andhra Pradesh.<sup>9</sup> Both these viṣayas were included in the Veṅgī kingdom. The capital of this kingdom is located at Pedda-vegi, about seven miles north of Ellore in the West Godavari district. Yuan Chwang says that the country An-to-lo or Andhra had its capital at Ping-k'k-lo or Veṅṅipura, which has been identified with the site mentioned above.

The Āndhras are mentioned in the thirteen Rock edict of Aśoka. Two inscriptions<sup>1</sup> discovered at Bhattiprolu in the Repalle taluq of the Guntur district point out the liberation of the Āndhra country from the Mauryan yoke. However, in fourth century A.D., the country was conquered by a Vākāṣaka ruler.<sup>2</sup> In Haraha inscription,<sup>3</sup> a certain lord of the Āndhras is said to have troubled the Maukhari ruler. Another inscription refers to the victory over Āndhras on behalf of Śīṣavarman.<sup>4</sup>

The Mayidavolu Inscription<sup>5</sup> of about the fourth century A.D. locates the Āndhra country (Āndhrapatha) in the lower valley of the Kṛṣṇā in the district round Dhannakaṣa or Amarāvati in the Sattanapalle taluq of the Guntur district. Chezara inscription<sup>6</sup> too connects the Āndhras with the Kṛṣṇā. Tiriliṅga of the Purle plates<sup>7</sup> of Indravarman has been identified with Telingana in Andhra Pradesh. The name Tiriliṅga (skt. Tri-liṅga) is traditionally derived from three shrines (liṅgas), namely those at Kāleśvaram, Śrīśailam and Drākṣārāma, all of which are located within the territory defined above as the Āndhra country.<sup>8</sup>

Allahabad Stone Pillar Inscription refers to the kingdom of Pālakka, which has been identified with Pālakkāṣa in the Nellore region.<sup>9</sup> G. Ramdas refers to the village of Pakkai in Nellore district, which marks the site of the capital of Pālakka. According to him, the kingdom extended beyond the region, now occupied by the districts of Cuddapah and North Arcot.<sup>10</sup> Karma-rāṣṭra, also known as Kamma-, Karmāṅka-, Kammāṅka-rāṣṭra and Kammāka-raṣṭra,<sup>11</sup> comprised Southern part of Guntur district and Northern part of Nellore district. The district called Muṇḍa-rāṣṭra<sup>1</sup> included Kavur taluq of the Nellore district, and the southern portion of the Kandukur taluq. Kavacakāra-bhoga was a sub-division of the Karmāṅka-rāṣṭra. The bhoga included the territory round Chendalur. The Pallava country mentioned in the Candravalli Inscription<sup>2</sup> of Mayūraśarman stretched over the eastern part of the Deccan, including the Kāñcī and Amaravati areas. Natra-pāṭi<sup>3</sup> and Nādatta-pāṭi<sup>4</sup> are the sub-divisions, the names of which end in pāṭi, which is another term, almost equivalent to bhoga. Both these pāṭis have not been traced so far. Netrapati possibly is the area on either bank of the Krishna. Bṛhat-proṣṭha grant refers to a group of thirty six agrahāra villages (śaṭ-triṃśadagrahāra). A Bengali parallel term, viz. Chhatris Mauza has been quoted by Mr. C. R. Krishnama-charlu.<sup>5</sup> The grant also mentions Dantayavāgū-bhoga. Another bhoga called Mahendra is mentioned in the Dhavalpeta plates.<sup>6</sup> Chezarla region was known as Kandara-janapada.<sup>7</sup> The country called Hiraṇya-rāṣṭra<sup>8</sup> seems to have been bordering on the province governed by Puṇyakumāra. The Ājuka kingdom comprised the region of the Guntur district.<sup>9</sup>

The name of the dynasty known as Viṣṇukunḍin survives in Viṇukunḍa, the name of a hill-fort and town in Krishna district, about sixty miles east of Śrīśaila and fifty miles south of river Krishna.<sup>10</sup> Hathigumpha inscription<sup>11</sup> of Khāravela refers to the family, which was known by the name Ava. Allahabad Stone Pillar Inscription mentions the kingdom Avamukta, which might have some connections with the family called Ava. Ptolemy mentions a people called Avarni or Aruarni near the Krishna. It is quite possible that Pithurūḍa was founded by these people. Viṣṇu-purāṇa equates the Ava family with the Āndhras.<sup>12</sup>

CENTRAL DECCAN

Vidarbha figures prominently in the Nasik eulogy<sup>1</sup> of Gautamī-putra Sātakaṇṭi. Further it occurs in Pāṇḍaraṅgapallī grant<sup>2</sup> of Avithēya. Vidarbha is located on the Northern fringe of Dakṣiṇāpātha in Nalopākhyāna of Mahābhārata.<sup>3</sup> It refers only to Northern part of Vidarbha, which comprised the Valley of the Payoṣṇī, the modern Pūrṇā, a tributary of the Tāptī.<sup>4</sup> A part of the area lay south of the Sahyādri-parrata (Ajanta Range) and a third portion occupied the valley of the Varadā (Wardha).<sup>5</sup> The third portion, as we learn from the drama Mālavikāgnimitra of Kālidāsa, was divided among the two cousins, with the river Varadā as the demarcating line.<sup>6</sup> It, thus, comprised the modern districts of Akola, Amravati, Buldhana, Yeotmal, Nagpur, Chanda, Bhandara and Wardha—all in present day state of Maharashtra. Chammak grant<sup>7</sup> of Pravara-sena II refers to the kingdom of Bhojakaṭa. The city of Bhojakaṭa has been identified with Bhatkuli village in Amravati district.<sup>8</sup> The kingdom of Bhojakaṭa included the modern Chammak situated in Achalapur taluq in Amravati district. It corresponded to Northern Berar between the rivers Tāptī and Pūrṇā. Asi-bhukti and Pākkaṇa-rāṣṭra, which are referred to in two Belora inscriptions,<sup>9</sup> roughly correspond to the kingdom of Bhojakaṭa. Lohanagar-bhoga, which is mentioned in Mallar Plates<sup>10</sup> of Mahāśivagupta, comprised the region round Loni, about nine miles south-west of Warud in Morsi taluq of Amravati district. Another sub-division, called Kōśika-mārga,<sup>11</sup> is to be placed somewhere in Achalapura taluq of Amravati district. From the mention of the inhabitants of Bhojakaṭa in the Bharhut inscriptions,<sup>12</sup> we come to know that the people of this kingdom were famous as pious donors in the early centuries of the Christian era.

Ārammi-rājya<sup>1</sup> corresponded to the territory round Arvi, the taluq headquarters of the Wardha district. Professor Mirashi, however, locates the Ārammi kingdom in Chhindwara district of Madhya Pradesh on the basis of the identification of some places mentioned in the Pandhurna grant.<sup>2</sup> According to him, the headquarters of Ārammi is identical with Amla, forty miles north-west of Chhindwara. He locates Hiranyapura-bhoga on the bank of the river Irai (ancient Hiranya-nadī) of Warora taluq of Wardha district. R. B. Hirallal, however, earlier suggested that Hiranyapura should be identified with Songaon near Chandur in Wardha district.

Pandhurna grant<sup>3</sup> of Pravarasena II refers to another kingdom, Vārucca. According to Professor Mirashi, its headquarters was at modern Waregaon, four miles west from Pandhurna in the Chhindwara district.

Benna-kārpara-bhāga was another sub-division of Ārammi-rājya. The name of this sub-division reminds us of the river Benna, i.e., Waināgaṅgā and it is very likely that the sub-division comprised the territory lying within twenty to thirty miles from the Eastern bank of Waināgaṅgā.<sup>4</sup> We can mention here the district known as Benna-kāṭa.<sup>5</sup> It comprised the territory round modern village Beni, thirty five miles to the east of Kosamba in the Gondia tahsil of Bhandara district. The district was probably divided into two parts, eastern and western, by the river Waināgaṅgā.

India Office grant<sup>6</sup> of Pravarasena II mentions the district, Nangara-kāṭaka, which is said to be situated in Uttara-mārga. Professor Mirashi locates the headquarters of this district at Mangrul of Akola district, at a distance of twenty five miles from Washim, the representative of the ancient city called Vatsagulma, the capital of a separate branch of the Vākataka dynasty. Mangrul is known to be an ancient site as more than one and a half thousand of Sātavāhana seals were discovered from this place some years back. It may be said here that the above identification is based on the assumption that the place-name Nangara had been wrongly inscribed for the original Mangara.

Two other districts, Supratiṣṭh-āhāra and Candrapura-saṅga-mikā, are known to us from the Vākāṭaka records.<sup>1</sup> The former district is said to have comprised the territory, which included the Hinganaghat tahsil of the Wardha district and the Northern part of the Warora and Yeotmal tahsils of Chanda and Yeotmal districts respectively. According to Professor Raychaudhuri, the district, Supratiṣṭh-āhāra, comprised the territory round the city of Supratiṣṭhita, the ancient home of Guṇāḍhya, known to us from Kaṭhāsari-t-sūgarā.<sup>2</sup> It may be said here that Professor Raychaudhuri's remark is based on a work written much later than the period of the Vākāṭakas and Professor Mirashi's identification is based on the information available mostly from Vākāṭaka records. The territorial division known as Candrapura-saṅgamikā<sup>3</sup> was located by Professor Kielhorn at Chandrapura in the south of Seoni and in the west of Wainagaṅgā.<sup>4</sup> R. B. Hiralal, however, identified it with Chandur in Wardha district, near the confluence of Candrabhāgā and Sarasvatī.<sup>5</sup> Professor Mirashi gives his different view. He places the district round Chanda, the district headquarters in Maharashtra. He also points out to the confluence of the rivers Irai and Jharpat near this town.<sup>6</sup>

The country called Bhogavardhana is referred to in Abhona plates<sup>7</sup> of Śaṅkaragaṇa, 595 A.D. The name also appears in early Brahmi inscriptions discovered at Sanchi<sup>8</sup> and Bharhut.<sup>9</sup> The place was famous for its Buddhist scholars and great donors. As regards the identification of Bhogavardhana, Mr. Gupta gave two suggestions. Firstly, he identified it with Bogte near Ujjain. But it has been refuted by Professor Mirashi on the ground that the Abhona plates were found in the Nasik district.<sup>10</sup> Mr. Gupta's alternative identification of Bhogavardhana with Bhagurdi, eight miles from Kalvan is also unlikely, because the country round Kalvan seems to be included in the bhoga of Vaṭasaṅgāra, as indicated by the Vadner grant<sup>1</sup> of Buddha-rāja. Professor Mirashi rightly identifies viśaya of Bhogavardhana with the Bokardhan taluq of the Aurangabad district.<sup>2</sup>

The countries known as Mulaka and Aśmaka are mentioned in the Nasik eulogy of Gautamīputra Sātakarṇi. Pandit V. Prahakar Sastri identifies the Mulaka country with Mulikināḍu, which at one time comprised the districts of Cuddapah, Kurnool and Bellary and south-eastern portion of the Nizam's dominions.<sup>3</sup> This identification, however, does not corroborate with the inscrip-tional and literary evidences. Nasik eulogy, first of all, mentions the country of Mulaka as lying between Asaka (Aśmaka) and Surāṭha (Surāṣṭra). Professor Sircar, moreover, has shown that the work Pārāyaṇa incorporated in the Suttanipāta, speaks of Mulaka with the town Pratiṣṭhāna or Paithan in Aurangabad district, as its capital.<sup>4</sup> Prof. Raychaudhuri writes that the country Mulaka stretched beyond the hills running from Daulatabad to Jalna.<sup>5</sup> Pratiṣṭhāna or Pratiṣṭhāna-patha<sup>6</sup> was a smaller territorial unit and it may be identical with the Pargana or taluq of Paithan in Aurangabad district.

The country known as Aśmaka<sup>7</sup> is recorded in one of the Ajanta Cave inscriptions and in Pandarangapalli grant of Avidheya. As mentioned above, the name of the country is given as Asaka in the Nasik cave inscription of Siri Pulumāyi. The country lay immediately to the south of Mulaka, i.e., Paithan region of Aurangabad. The ancient capital of the Aśmaka country was, according to the Mahābhārata,<sup>8</sup> at Paudanya or Podana, which is known as Potana in the Pali literature.<sup>9</sup> The place is probahly the same which is known as Pādāna in the early Brahmi inscriptions. Professor Raychaudhuri identifies Podana with modern Bodhan near Godavari in the Nizamabad district in Andhra Pradesh ahutting on the Nander district in Maharashtra.<sup>10</sup> Aśmaka, thus, embraced the Telugu district of Nizamahad as well as the pre-dominantly Maratha speaking district of Nander. The territory occupied the central part of the Godavari valley between the Nirmal range in the north and Balaghat range in the South.

Washim plates<sup>1</sup> of Vindhyasakti II mention the district called Nandikāḍa, which comprised roughly the present district Nander in Maharashtra. Professor Sircar in this connection concluded that the branch of the Vākāṭakas with Vatsagulma as its capital 'ruled over the southern most region of Berar and northern part of old Hyderabad; and the ancient Āśmaka country has been located by scholars in this region'.<sup>2</sup> King Mānāḍka claimed victory over the Āśmaka country<sup>3</sup>, which probably was ruled at that time by the Vākāṭaka dynasty.

Nasik Prasasti refers to the overlordship of Gautami-putra Śātakarṇi over the Asika country also. The country has been identified differently. Professor Mirashi identifies it with Khandesh, bounded on the east by Berar, on the north by the Nimar district and parts of Indore district and on the south by the Aurangabad district.<sup>4</sup> Professor Raychaudhuri, however, remarks that Asika is associated with the river Kṛṣṇā and it appears that it occupied the middle valley of the Kṛṣṇā. The territory was bounded by Vidarbha in the North, Tilanga or Āndhra in the east and Anegundi in the South.<sup>5</sup> A passage of the Hathigumpha inscription mentions Asika-nagara, the capital of the Asika country. In Chapter 57 of the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, Naisakas, probably a corrupt form of Rṣikas (Isikas) are mentioned as inhabiting the region between the Bhogavardhana and Āśmakas on the one hand and the Kuntalas and the Āndhras on the other.

We may here mention the country known as Cālukya vijaya.<sup>6</sup> The country, it seems, formed part of the Rayalsima district, inclusive of Kurnool and perhaps parts of the Mahaboobnagar district. Haraha Inscription<sup>7</sup> of Śānavarman refers to the people Śālikas, which probably belonged to the Cālukya country, mentioned above.

WESTERN DECCAN

In Rock edict V, Aśoka seems to include under the head āparāta the Raṭhikas, Pitinikas and the Bhojas. The Raṭhikas, also known as Laṭhikas and Rāṣṭrikas, and the Bhojas, were the ancestors of the Mahārāṭhis and of Mahābhōjas of the Sātavāhana period. Two Kuda and one Bedsa inscriptions<sup>1</sup> refer to the Mahābhōjas (Mahābhōyas). The Hathigumpha inscription<sup>2</sup> of Khāravela records the defeat of the Raṭhikas and Bhojakas by king Khāravela of Orissa. It has been suggested that Bhojakas occupied the ancient kingdom of Vidarbha. We have already referred to the country Bhojakaṭa. It is also possible that Mahārāṭhis controlled Poona and the adjoining districts. The Rāṣṭrikas in all cases may be supposed to have occupied the adjoining tract belonging to the Bhojas. The Pitinikas are identified with the Paishanakas or natives of Paithan, on the northern bank of the Godavari. Paithan is the modern name of ancient Pratiṣṭhāna, which was a prosperous city during the rule of the Sātavāhana kings.

A part of the upper valley of the Godavari was occupied in early times by the Nāsikyās. A Nāsikya-vīṣaya and a Nāsikya-deśa figure in the records of 8th and the 9th century A.D.<sup>3</sup> Vaṭanagara-bhaga recorded in the Vadner plates<sup>4</sup> of Buddharāja comprised the Chandur taluq of the Nasik district. Another bhoga called Śrinilaya lay on the southern bank of the Bhīma-nadi.<sup>5</sup> The district called Govardhan-āhāra comprised the territory round about the village Govardhana-Gangapur on the right bank of the Godavari, about six miles west of Nasik. Mosini-Pathaka comprised the valley of the river Mosam in the northern part of Beglam taluq of Nasik district.<sup>6</sup> Another vīṣaya of Nasik country was Gopa-rāṣṭra.

A cave inscription<sup>7</sup> discovered from Karle refers to a tribe which is possibly connected with Ukhada, an ancient district, comprising the territory of modern district Karle. As regards the district of Khandesh, we find it represented by the territorial subdivision called Nagara-Pathaka,<sup>1</sup> the headquarters of which is identified with Nagar Devla, ten miles north-east of Vaghli in East Khandesh district. A sub-division called Kāśapura is mentioned in Sirpur plate<sup>2</sup> of Rudradāsa. It should have been located in West Khandesh district of Maharashtra.

Nasik eulogy of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi refers to the country called Aparānta, which corresponded to North Konkan and North Maharashtra inclusive of Nasik and Karle districts. The evidence of the Junagarh rock inscription<sup>3</sup> of Rudradāman points to a similar conclusion. A Kanheri Buddhist cave inscription conveys the definite information that an inhabitant of Kalyāṇa (Thana district) was an Aprāntika.<sup>4</sup> Aparānta also included modern Sopārā (Śūrpāraka), about six miles to the north of Basseln.<sup>5</sup> Aparānta is also mentioned in Nagarjunikonda Second Apsidal Temple inscription.<sup>6</sup> The association of the mountain Trikūṭa, which is probably the name of the range of hills that borders the Nasik district on the west with the famous dynasty of the Trikūṭakas is an established fact.<sup>7</sup> Surat plates of Vyāghrasena, 489 A.D. indicate that the dynasty exercised its sway over Aparānta and other countries (Aparāntādi-deśa). An Ajanta inscription<sup>8</sup> of about the same age distinguishes Trikūṭa (that is, Aparānta) from Lāṣa. Chandravalli Inscription<sup>9</sup> of Mayūrasarman mentions the Trekūṭa country, which is said to have extended from the vicinity of Bombay to near Surat including southern Gujarat and northern part of Maharashtra.

In the inscriptions<sup>10</sup> of the 6th and the 7th centuries A.D., Aparānta is generally described by the name Koṅkaṇa. Nerur grant<sup>11</sup> of Maṅgaleśa refers to Purī, the capital of the country known as Koṅkaṇa. Moreover it refers to a territory named

Kuṇḍivāṭa, which belonged to Koṅkaṇa-viṣaya and which has been identified with Kuṇḍi in Saṅgameshwar taluq of Ratnagiri district. Aihole inscription<sup>1</sup> of 634 A.D. refers to seven states of Koṅkaṇa. One of these states was Revatīdvīpa.<sup>2</sup> The country called Revatīdvīpa was identified by Professor R. G. Bhandarkar with a fortified promontory Redi, about eight miles south of Vengurlain Ratnagiri district.<sup>3</sup> Dr. Fleet, however, identified it with Koṅkaṇa—Nine Hundred, which included the present territory of Goa and narrow strip of land between Sawantawadi and the sea and which embraced the Vengurla taluq and southern part of Malvan taluq up to the Kalawali river.<sup>4</sup> As regards Revatīdvīpa, Aihole inscription says that 'after besetting the ramparts of Revatīdvīpa, Maṅgaleśa's army was reflected in the water of the great sea as if it were the army of Varuṇa, which has come at his command !' It is evident that Revatīdvīpa was situated on the sea-coast. Goa plates<sup>5</sup> of 610 A.D. mention the territorial division Khetāhāra-deśa, which has been identified by Dr. Fleet with the Khed taluq of the Ratnagiri district.<sup>6</sup> Mr. K. T. Telong however, proposed to identify it with Kittur in Belgaum district.<sup>7</sup>

Siroda plates<sup>8</sup> of Devarāja refer to the district called Dīyayā, which is represented by Salsette in Goa. Two grants<sup>9</sup> of Prthivīśmalla-varman, a Bhoja king, refer to Kupalapakāṭāhāra-deśa or Kupalakāṭa-deśa, which has not been traced so far. Chiplun grant<sup>10</sup> of Pulakeśi II refers to the district (viṣaya) called Avaretikā, which comprised the Chiplun taluq of the Ratnagiri district, Maharashtra. One of the Kanheri inscriptions refers to the district called Śorparakāhāra,<sup>11</sup> which included the region round Sopara near Bassein.

Aihole inscription of 634 A.D. mentions the country called Tri-Mahārāṣṭraka, which is said to have comprised the present day states of Maharashtra, Mysore, Madhya Pradesh (excluding Baghelkhand and Bundelkhand) and Gujarat (excluding Kathiawar and Northern Gujarat).<sup>1</sup> Professor Raychaudhuri, however, suggests that the term Tri-Mahārāṣṭraka refers to the traditional thāḍīs or dales into which the Maratha country is divided, namely Gaṅg-thāḍī (banks of the Godavari), Bhīm-thāḍī (banks of the Bhīmā), and Nīr-thāḍī (banks of the Nīra, a tributary of the Bhīmā).<sup>2</sup> The territory denoted by the expression uttarāṁ Bhaīmarathyāḥ<sup>3</sup> lit., lying to the north of the Bhīmā (in the Aihole inscription), together with the territory lying on the south bank of the river Bhaīmarathī,<sup>4</sup> (in the Satara grant of A.D. 616-17), and the territory of Śrinilaya-bhoga constituted the Bhīm-thāḍī of tradition. To its north lay the Goparāṣṭra-viṣaya of Nīrpan record, which comprised the traditional Gaṅg-thāḍī of tradition. The southern-most division, that is, the Nīr-thāḍī is mentioned in the Jejuri plates<sup>5</sup> of 687 A.D. Thus, it is possible to trace in the inscriptions of the time of Pulakeśin II and his grandson Vinayāditya, the parts of Marāṭhā country known as Nīr-thāḍī, Bhīm-thāḍī, and Gaṅg-thāḍī.

One of the Karle cave inscriptions refer to the province (āhāra) of Māmāja.<sup>6</sup> It is represented by Māval, hilly portion of the Poona and Satara districts. Māvali lay to the east of the most heavily populated section of Maharashtra, the Konkan coastal strip. Gokak plates<sup>7</sup> of Dejjā-Mahārāja refer to Kāśmāṇḍi-viṣaya, which included parts of Satara district.

The country called Kuntala appears in an Ajanta cave inscription<sup>8</sup> of fifth century A.D. and in Baiyaghat plates<sup>9</sup> of Prthviṣeṇa II., as well as in Pāṇḍuraṅgapalli grant<sup>10</sup> of the Rāṣṭrakūṭa king Avīdhya. The Kuntala people mentioned in the last of these records were no doubt the Kadambas of Vanavāsī (Banavāsī), who ruled over the North Kanar district and parts of the Mysore, Belgaum and Dharwar districts. The Gurgi inscription<sup>1</sup> of Prabodhaśiva refers to the Lord of Kuntala as residing in Vanavāsī (North Kanara district). Professor Mirashi places Kuntalas in the Maratha country, while the other writers like Dr. Fleet and Dr. Sircar locate the Kuntala country in the heart of the Kanarese area.<sup>2</sup> The position of the Kuntala country is indicated by the fact that it was washed by the river Kṛṣṇavarṇā<sup>3</sup> and included Kurgod in Bellary district,<sup>4</sup> Gaṅgavādī<sup>5</sup> in south Mysore, Nirguṇḍ<sup>6</sup> in Dharwar, and Taragal in Kathapur.<sup>7</sup> Kuntala and Karnāṭa are used as synonyms in the Vikramāṅkadeva-carita of Bilhaṇa.<sup>8</sup>

Karnāṭa-deśa is mentioned in Birur grant<sup>9</sup> of Viṣṇuvarman. As regards the origin of the name of the country, there are many suggestions. Some take it as a derivative from a Dravidian original like Kar-nāḍu=Kaṇ-ṇāḍu (black country) or Kara-nāḍu (great country, cf. Mahā-rāṣṭra).<sup>10</sup> Pandit V. Prabhākara Śāstri<sup>11</sup> and Dr. N. Venkataramanayya<sup>12</sup> both are inclined to interpret Karnāṭa as land (nāḍu) of Sātakarṇis (Kaṇṇa being an abbreviated form of Sātakarṇī). Dr. N. Venkatavamanayya suggested that Karṇāṭa is equal to Kaṇṇa-viśaya or Kaṇṇāḍu, the original home of the Sātavāhanas at the foot of the Śrīśaila. It is difficult to be definite here because there is no early evidence to support this view. The above mentioned Kaṇṇa-viśaya has been referred to in the Hyderabad grant<sup>13</sup> of Vikramāditya I.

Vaijayanti or Banavāsī was, as has already been noticed, the early capital (tilaka) of the Karnāṭa country.<sup>14</sup> Gautamīputra Sātakarṇī issued one of his Nasik inscriptions from Vaijayanti.<sup>15</sup>

Mānavyagotra Hārīṣṭuta Viṇhukaḍa Cuḷukulānanda Sātakaṇṇi, Śivaskandavarman & Mayūraśarman, an early ruler of the Kadamba dynasty—all these are known to be the lords of Vaijayanṭi.<sup>1</sup> A Malavalli grant<sup>2</sup> mentions the group of twelve villages known as Grāmāhāra of Sahalāṭṭavi, Sahala being one of the twelve villages. The country known as Vanavāsa or Vanavāsī is mentioned in some of the Nagarjunikond inscriptions of the fourth century A.D.<sup>3</sup> The country corresponded to the area around modern Banavasi in North Kanara district.<sup>4</sup> Mykadoni inscription<sup>5</sup> of Pulumāvi refers to the district called Sātavāhani-hāra. It has been identified with the territory comprising the Bellary and Adoni taluqs of the Bellary district, Mysore. The janapada styled Sātāhani-hāra in the Sātavāhana period became known as Sātāhani-raṭṭha in the reign of Śivaskandavarman, an early ruler of Pallava dynasty.<sup>6</sup>

The Candravalli inscription<sup>7</sup> of Mayūraśarman records among other territories, the viṣaya of Sayindaka, which has been suggested to be the same as the country of the Sendrakas. The Sendrakas are known to be of Nāga origin and their country is generally identified with Nāyarkhaṇḍa or Nāgarkhaṇḍa division of the Banavāsī province, which possibly formed part of the present North Kanara district of Mysore. The Sendraka-viṣaya also occurs in Bennur grant<sup>8</sup> of Kṛṣṇavarman II, and is thus known to have been included in the dominions of the Kadamba king Kṛṣṇavarman II. A Sendraka chief named Dhānuśakti seems to have been a feudatory of the Kadamba king Harivarman.<sup>9</sup> After the fall of the Kadambas, the Sendrakas transferred their allegiance to the Cālukyas of Badami. A record<sup>10</sup> of Pulakeśin I mentions the Sendraka king Rudranāla Goṇḍa, his son Śivara and grandson Śāmiyara, who ruled the Kuḷuṇḍi-viṣaya (Belgaum district) with its headquarters Alakṭaka-nagara. The Chiplun grant<sup>11</sup> says that the Sendraka prince Śrī-Vallabha Senānanda-rāja was the maternal uncle of Pulakeśin I.

Another viṣaya, Karvāṇṇāṅgam, is recorded in Sirsi grant<sup>1</sup> of Kṛṣṇavarman II. Karvāṇṇāṅgam has been supposed to be Karur in Sirsi taluq of North Kanara district. An adjoining viṣaya was Vallāvi.<sup>2</sup> The district Vallāvi has been identified with Ballavi-Seventy in the Honnali taluq of the Shimoga district. In Halebedu grant,<sup>3</sup> the viṣaya called Vallāvi is located near the Tuṅgabhadra river and is said to have situated in the Banavāsī-twelve-thousand. The following districts are said to have located in the Dharwar and Belgaum districts. These are Śivapura<sup>4</sup> (Halyal taluq of the Dharwar district), Palāśikā,<sup>5</sup> (Halsi in Bidī taluq of the Belgaum district), Sollunḍuraka-Saptatī<sup>6</sup> (Khanapur and Halyal taluqs). The two countries, Sindhuthayā-rāṣṭra<sup>7</sup> and Pantipura-viṣaya,<sup>8</sup> have not been identified so far.

Some of the territories of the Southern Mysore (Ancient Gaṅgaṇḍī) are also mentioned in the grants of the Kadamba dynasty. The city and the country (viṣaya) of Āsandi is mentioned in the Davangere grant<sup>9</sup> of Ravivarman and Durmaya plates<sup>10</sup> of Ravi-mahārāja. Āsandi is represented by the modern village of the same name in Kadur taluq of Chickmagalur district, near Ajjampur.<sup>11</sup> Another territory adjoining to the country of Āsandi was called as Devalge-viṣaya, the same as Devalige-nāḍ of later epigraphs. The earliest reference to the viṣaya called Devalge is found in Keregalur plates<sup>12</sup> of Mādhava II of the Gaṅga dynasty, year 500 A.D. The country Devalge is said to have included parts of the Belur and Chickmagalur taluqs of Chickmagalur district in Mysore. Another grant<sup>13</sup> of the Western Gaṅgas discovered from Kuṭṭithiyanu refers to the district (viṣaya) of Perūr, which included the village called Herur in Sira taluq of Tumkur district.<sup>1</sup> Kudalur grant<sup>2</sup> of Mādhavavarman, 475 A.D. mentions the country, Marukara, which is said to be identical with the larger part of the present Tumkur district (excluding Sira taluq) and the Doddaballapur taluq of the Bangalore district.

The country called Mahiṣa-viṣaya is recorded in the Hebbata grant<sup>3</sup> of Viṣṇuvarman. The name of the country evidently the source from which the present Mysore has derived its name.<sup>4</sup> L. Rice had established that Mahiṣa-Manḍala may be applied to south of Mysore.<sup>5</sup> Dr. Fleet, however, maintained that Maysūr, Maisūr or Mayisūr was a village, which began to rise to importance about 1500 A.D.<sup>6</sup> It may be mentioned here that the name Maysūr-nāḍ occurs in a grant of the third century A.D.<sup>7</sup> From Buddhistic literature we come to know the different similar names such as Mahiṣa-raṭṭha,<sup>8</sup> Mahiṣa-Manḍala or Māhiṣaka-Manḍala.<sup>9</sup> Mahiṣa-Manḍala is said to have comprised a borderland of Buddhist middle country.<sup>10</sup> But Mahiṣa-viṣaya of the Kadamba grant is certainly applicable to some parts of the state of Mysore, the exact limit of whose boundaries is quite difficult to ascertain. Hebbata grant also mentions a sub-division Saṭṭipalli-Jaripāṭa, which is said to be a part of the Mahiṣa-viṣaya.<sup>11</sup> Now we come to the district (viṣaya) of Mogalur, which is mentioned in the Nilambur plates<sup>12</sup> of Ravivarman. Mogalur is supposed to be modern Mugur or Mullur near Talakad, on the left bank of the river Kāverī, about twenty eight miles to the south-east of Mysore. the early Kadamba and Gaṅga dynasty is Punnāḍa having Punāṭa or Punnāṭa, as some of the variants of its name. Ptolemy seems to have mentioned it as Pounata, where beryls were found.<sup>1</sup> The country Punnāṭa was adorned by the rivers Kāverī and Kāpini (Kahhani). The capital of the country of Punnāṭa, which lay to the south of Mysore, was Kirtipura or Kittur on Kāpini (Kabbani) river in Mysore.<sup>2</sup> Bedirur grant<sup>3</sup> of a Gaṅga ruler recorded the city and country of Kolāla. The Kolāla-grāma has been identified with modern Kolala in the Tiplur taluq of the Tumkur district of Mysore.<sup>4</sup> Kolāla-pura is taken to be identical with the present city of Kolar, the headquarters of a district of the same name in Mysore State.

The district (viṣaya) called Korikuṇḍa is referred to in three grants<sup>5</sup> of the Gaṅga rulers. It comprised the parts of the Mahir and Hoskote taluqs of Bangalore district.

The boundaries of the kingdom of Western Gaṅgas were—in the north, Marañḍale, in the east, Tonḍaimaṇḍalam, in the west, the ocean in the direction of Cera, and in the south, Koṅgu country.<sup>6</sup> The Mahākūṭa inscription<sup>7</sup> of Cālukya king Maṅgaleśa mentions the above mentioned territory by the name, Gaṅga. In the four Gaṅga records, we read of a district called Paru or Paruvi.<sup>8</sup> The headquarters of the district is said to be modern Parigi, seven miles north of Hindupur in the Anantapur district, Andhra Pradesh. Bendiganhalli plates<sup>9</sup> mention the name of a sub-division Peraṣi-bhoga under the jurisdiction of Paru-viṣaya. The kingdom of Western Gaṅgas was thus spread up to Anantapur district in Andhra Pradesh. Kapoli plates<sup>3</sup> of Aṣankitavarman refers to a gift made by the chief of the Kaikeya lineage. According to Bannahali plates<sup>4</sup> of Kṛṣṇavarman II, Kṛṣṇavarman I married a girl of Kekaya family, which probably ruled in the modern Chitaldrug district of Mysore. A stone inscription of a Kekaya chief named Śivanandavarman has been discovered at Anaji in the Davangere taluq of Chitaldrug district. The Kekaya family thus belonged to the Chitaldrug district of Mysore.

FAR SOUTH

Aśoka, in his Rock Edicts II and XIII, mentions the Calas (Coḷā) the Pāṇḍyas (Pāṇḍā), Keralaputras and Satiyaputras as forming praeanta or outlying provinces of his Empire.<sup>5</sup> The mention of the Cola kingdom is also found in the following inscriptions :

1. Two Trisīrāpalli rock inscriptions.<sup>6</sup>
2. Mahākūṣa inscription<sup>7</sup> of Cālukya ruler Maṅgaleśa.
3. Aihole inscription<sup>8</sup> of Pulakeśin II, S. Year 556.
4. Nirpan grant<sup>9</sup> of Nāgavardhana.
5. Bedirur grant<sup>10</sup> of Bhōvikrama, S. Year 556.

Trisīrāpalli inscriptions mention that the Trisīrāpalli rock resembled the diadem of the Cola country. These inscriptions also associate the river Kāveri with the name of Colas. The Cola country comprised the districts of Tiruehirapalli and Tanjore. It stretched along the river Pennar to the river Vellar and on the west reached almost the borders of Coorg. From the Colas, the hegemony of the South passed to the Ceras, and later still to the Pāṇḍyas, who were ousted by the Pallavas, who afterwards became the suzerain power of South India.

Paṇḍa, Paṇḍiya, Paṇḍiya and Pāḍā are the variants used in the different versions of Aśoka's Rock Edict II and XIII, for the Pāṇḍya kingdom.<sup>1</sup> In Hathigumpha inscription<sup>2</sup> of Khāravela, the term Paṇḍa is used. However in the three Cālukya inscriptions, the kingdom is known by the Sanskrit name Pāṇḍya<sup>3</sup>. The Pāṇḍya kingdom comprised the districts of Madurā, Tinnevely and South Travancore. It extended from Madurā to Kanyākumārī. The country was known to Ptolemy as Pandion with Modoura as its royal city.

Keralaputras are mentioned in inscriptions<sup>4</sup> of Aśoka as a people living on the outside border of his realm. Mahākūṣa inscription of Maṅgaleśa as well as Aihole inscription of Pulakeśin II refer to the country called Kerala.<sup>5</sup> Pulakeśin is said to have caused great prosperity to the Coṣas, Keralas and Pāṇḍyas. Nirpan grant<sup>6</sup> of Nāgavardhan describes the kingdom called Cera, which is the same as Kerala.

During the age of the Periplus, Cerobothra (Keralaputras) was included within Damirica.<sup>7</sup> The Kerala country comprised Travancore, Cochin and Malabar districts. It extended from the south of Kupaka down to Kanneti in Central Travancore. The Koṅga-deśa corresponding to Coimbatore district and southern part of the Salem district was annexed to it.

Satiyaputras, mentioned in Aśoka's Rock Edict II, is differently interpreted. S. V. Venkateswara and B. C. Law are in favour of identifying the country with Satiyavrata-kṣetra or Kāñcīpura.<sup>8</sup> V. A. Smith identified Satiyaputra with the Satiyamaṅgalam taluq of Coimbatore district. Some hold that Satiyaputra is the same as Satyabhūmi, which corresponds to the north-Malabar including a portion of Kasergode taluq, south Canara.<sup>9</sup> According to Professor Nilakanta Śāstrī, or Satiyaputra is identical with Atiyaman, the territory round about Tagadur-Dharamapuri, i.e., Salem-Mysore border.<sup>10</sup> K. G. Sesha Aiyer as early as 1937 suggested Atiya a native name for Satiya and he gives the form Atiyaman in the earliest Tamil literary texts.<sup>1</sup> Barnett wrote in his Cambridge History of India that the Satiyaputras may possibly 'represent the region near Mangalore, but it is atleast equally likely that they were the forefathers of the Śātavāhana dynasty of Āndhra deśa'.<sup>2</sup>

Harīṣeṇa, the author of Samudragupta prabastī, refers to Kāñcī and Kusthalapura with other kingdoms of Dakṣiṇāpatha. Kāñcī is conjeeveram in the Chingleput district, Madras. The Kingdom Kusthalapura is said to have comprised the region round modern town of Kuttalur near Polur in North Arcot district, Madras.<sup>3</sup>

Mahākūṣa inscription<sup>4</sup> of Maṅgaleśa mentions the country called Musaka. Fleet remarks that the country seems to be the part of the Malabar coast between Quilon and Cape Comorin.<sup>5</sup>

Some of the Brahmi inscriptions<sup>6</sup> refer to the countries known as Ivaku-Naṭṭu and Atantuvayika-Raṭṭha. Marugattalai and Anaimalai inscriptions<sup>7</sup> refer to the people Kayaipa, (skt. Kāśyapas). Kāśyapas are said to have belonged to Atantuvayika-rāṭṭra. Moreover, they had the Airāvata sub-sect.

Rock Edicts II and XIII of Aśoka refer to the country called Tambapaṇṇī, Skt. Tāmraparṇī. It is called Taprobane by Greek writers. V. A. Smith previously indicated that the term referred to the river Tāmraparṇī in Tinnevelly. However, in Rock Edict XIII, Tāmraparṇī is placed below Pāṇḍya or Dravid country. It, therefore, refers to the country known as Sri Lanka. One of the Nagarjunikonda inscriptions also refers to the island of Tambapaṇṇī.<sup>8</sup> Sri Lanka is mentioned by the name Āmradvīpa and Sīhaladvīpa in some of the inscriptions.<sup>9</sup>

CHAPTER II

THE CITIES

The classification of the place-names into two groups of cities and villages is a complicated task. However, the place-names like Daśanapura and Aniruddhapuri ending in pura or puri, and Kaliṅganagara ending in nagara, no doubt, denote towns or cities. There are certain ancient cities like Bārāṇasī and Bharukaccha etc., whose names give no such indication. In such cases, the description of the place itself impresses upon us of its being a city or a town. Besides the epigraphic sources, such description is to be gathered from the accounts of the classical writers or from Indian literature, generally the epics and the Purāṇas. While the Buddhist literature furnishes detailed account of the city of Bārāṇasī, the classical writers like Ptolemy and others describe the city called Barygaza, which is no other than Bharukaccha of the inscriptions. Sometimes, excavations also reveal features, which bring about the antiquity of the places, which have been playing prominent role not only in historical period, but in Pre-historic and Proto-historic times also. The recent excavations carried out at Eran, ancient Airakina, in Sagar district, Madhya Pradesh, have revealed four periods of occupation from the Chalcolithic age to about sixteenth-eighteenth century A D.

A city or a town, generally, has, in certain period, been either a political centre of a State, may be, a Monarchical Republican, or belonging to some subordinate ruler, or it has been the headquarters of a territorial unit. Sometimes the inscriptions mention a territorial unit, the headquarters of which bearing the same name is not mentioned there separately. Such names being mentioned in the previous chapter have not been repeated here.

There are places like Prayāga, Pāṭaliputra and Bārāṇasī etc., which have been prominently recognized in the past and which hold even now the position of a Metropolitan or a big city. However, most of the places which at one time were holding highest position, are now deserted places leaving some monuments near them or a small village with few huts, Airakiṇa, Kauśāmbī, Padmapura and Pravarapura are some such examples.

Most of the cities like Prayāga and Pāṭaliputra are generally known to-day by their modern names like Allahabad and Patna, etc. However, the tendency to change the modern names into ancient names is developing gradually. We have now the names Varanasi, Vidisha and Valabhipur for Banaras, Bhilsa and Vala. The cities of Sūrpāraka, Veṅgī, Kāncīpura, Takṣaśilā and Kauśāmbī are, however, still known by the names in developed form like Sopara, Vegi, Conjeeveram, Taxila and Kosam. It is interesting to note that certain cities like Nasik, Kalyan and Cuttock (Katak) have retained their ancient names throughout the long drawn period of history. The city of Nāsikya or Nāsika was known to the famous grammarian Kātyāyana, whom tradition assigns to the fourth century B.C.

From epigraphic sources, we very rarely gather detailed information about a city or a town. Mostly the name of the place alone is mentioned, but in some cases, generally in copper-plate grants, details about its location—the territorial units with which it was connected and the surrounding villages, are also given. These details are very helpful in determining the identity of such places. The place of the issue of the royal grants is generally a city or a town. There are, however, in some cases lengthy literary descriptions also of the buildings, roads, trees, lakes and rivers, the temples and even the people connected with some towns. The city of Daśapura in Mandsaur inscription of the guild of the silk-weavers is a model example of such descriptions. But such cases are very few. Generally we have to satisfy ourselves with whatsoever meagre information we get from the epigraphic sources or some more information available from other sources.

There are certain places, which have not been identified so far. Kandarapura mentioned in the Mattepad plates<sup>1</sup> of Dīmodara-varman is an example of this type. In some cases, the identification of the cities are not finally settled. Different scholars have forwarded reasonable arguments in support of their views. In the case of Rāmāgiri we are almost certain about its identification with Ramtek. In case of Māhiṣmatī, however, we are inclined to agree with the arguments forwarded by

Dr. H. D. Sankalia.<sup>1</sup>

Now here follows the actual description of the cities taken in alphabetical order.

ACALAPURA

The city of Acalapura is mentioned in the Nagardhan plates<sup>2</sup> of Svāmīrāja (570 A.D.) as well as in the Tiwarkhed plates<sup>3</sup> of Nannarāja (C. 6th century). It is usually identified with Achalapur, the headquarters of a taluq in the Amaravati district of Maharashtra. Acalapura is so called as it is situated just at the foot of the Satpura hills. Nagardhan plates<sup>4</sup> describe that the river Śūlanadī was flowing by the side of Acalapura, but there is no Śūlanadī traceable in the vicinity of modern Achalapur.

ADHICCHATRĀ

Adhicchatrā appears as the name of a town in the following inscriptions :

1. Pabhosa cave inscriptions<sup>5</sup> of Āśādhasena.
2. Ramnagar fragmentary image inscription.<sup>6</sup>

The Pabhosa inscriptions mention Bahasaśimitra and Śaunakāyana as the rulers of Adhicchatrā. Adhicchatra is even now known by the name of Ahichchhatra. Ahichchhatra is confined at present to the great fortress in the lands of Alampur Kot and Nasratganj, near the village of Ramnagar, twenty miles west of Bareilly in U.P. The Allahabad Pillar inscription<sup>7</sup> of Samudragupta refers to a powerful king named Acyuta, whose coins have been discovered at Ahichchhatra. Adhicchatrā was the capital of Northern Pañcāla, which figured prominently during the period of the Mahābhārata.<sup>8</sup> Ptolemy called the city Adisadra.<sup>9</sup> During the 7th century, when Hiuen tsang visited the city, it was seventeen or eighteen li in circuit. The people were honest and diligent in learning. There were more than ten Buddhist monasteries and nine Deva-temples.<sup>1</sup> There were also four small stūpas built on the spots associated with previous Buddhas. As a Jain centre, the city known as Saṃkhyāvatī was visited by Pārśvanātha, who was protected by the Nāgarāja of the place from the inimical Kamaṣhāsura.<sup>2</sup>

ĀGARIYA-PURA

Āgariyapura is found in the Yekkeri rock inscription<sup>3</sup> of Pulakeśin II of the first half of the seventh century A.D. It should be located somewhere in the Paragad taluq of Belgaum district in Mysore State.<sup>4</sup>

AIRAKIṆA, AIRIKIṆA or ERAKIṆA

Airikiṇa occurs as the town of Airikiṇa-pradeśa in Eran stone inscription of Samudragupta. In one of the Sāñelī stūpa inscriptions, we come across a term, which has been read as Erakiṇa.<sup>5</sup> An interesting seal bearing the figure of Gaṇa-Lakṣmī carries an inscription in Gupta characters mentioning the name of the city as Airakiṇa. Airakiṇa or Airikiṇa is identical with Eran, a village on the left bank of the Bina, eleven miles to the west by north from Khurai in the same sub-division of the Sagar district in Madhya Pradesh. Well-known for its Gupta remains, consisting of temples and inscribed pillars, this ancient site surrounded by the Bina river on three sides was excavated recently. These excavations have revealed four periods of occupation from the Chalcolithic age to about sixteenth-eighteenth centuries A.D. In the second period covering a few centuries before the beginning of the christian era, alongwith other finds, the discovery of a circular lead piece, with the legend Raño Idagutasa in Mauryan Brahmi is significant. The third period covering the first four or five centuries of the Christian era is the most important one. It yielded a large hoard of punch-marked coins and those of Rāmagupta, a broken terracota seal of some western rulers and several other objects.<sup>6</sup>

ĀNANDAPURA

The Sarsavni plates<sup>1</sup> of Buddharāja and the Alina grant<sup>2</sup> of Śīlāditya VII were issued from Ānandapura. This place was the royal residence of King Buddharāja. During Maitraka regime, it was the headquarters of a viṣaya having the same name. Dr. Altekar identified the city of Ānandapura with modern Vadnagar, fourteen kilometres from Visnagar, the headquarters of a taluq of the same name in the Mehsana district.<sup>3</sup> Professor Kielhorn, however, identified Ānandapura with Anand, the chief town of a sub-division of the same name in Kaira district, twenty-one miles south-east of Kaira.<sup>4</sup> The latter view is supported by the fact that the village Kumārivaḍao (modern Kavarwara) granted by the charter of Buddharāja is much nearer to Anand than to Vadnagar.

ĀNARTAPURA

This city is mentioned in the following inscriptions of the Maitraka rulers :

1. Vala Museum grant<sup>5</sup> of Dhruvasena I, G. 226.
2. Dhadya grant<sup>6</sup> of Dharasena II, G. 252.
3. Alina grant<sup>7</sup> of Dharasena II, G. 270.
4. Vala Museum grant<sup>8</sup> of Śīlāditya I, G. 287.
5. Amreli plates<sup>9</sup> of Dhruvasena II, G. 323.
6. Alina grant<sup>10</sup> of Dharasena IV, G. 330.

On account of separate occurrence of Ānandapura in Maitraka records, Ānartapura should be regarded as a locality different from Ānandapura. It may be identical with Dwarkā, ancient Kuśasthali mentioned in the Mahābhārata as capital of the country called Ānarta. In most of the Maitraka records, it is stated that the family of the donee hailed from Ānartapura. Sometimes, the donee belonged to the Caturvedin family of Ānartapura.

ANIRUDDHAPURA

Surat grant<sup>1</sup> of Vyāghrasena was issued from the victorious city of Aniruddhapura, which seems to have been the capital of the Traikūṭakas. Bagumra grant<sup>2</sup> of Sendraka Alīśakti indicates that Aniruddhapuri (the same as Aniruddhapura) should be looked for not very far from the donated village Wanesa in Surat district, which was near Bagumra in Balesar district. Aniruddhapura may be identical with Alampur (Railway station on Surendranagar-Bhavanagar route of Western Railways).

ĀRYAPURA

It occurs in Mahākūṭa inscription<sup>3</sup> of Maṅgaleśa. Āryapura represents the modern town Aihole in the Hungund Taluq of Bijapur district, Mysore State.

ĀSANAPURA

Pulimburu plates<sup>4</sup> of Jayasimha I mention Āsanapurasthāna, i.e., the place (of worship) in Asanapura. The city of Asanapura was situated in Guddavāḍi-niṣaya. Dr. Subba Rao identifies the city with the modern village bearing the same name Asanapura and situated a few miles off the Drākṣārāma in East Godavari district.

ĀŚVATTHANAGARA

Āśvatthanagara appears in Rithpur plates<sup>5</sup> of Prabhāvatigupta. It was situated on Koṣika mārga. As suggested by Y. R. Gupta,<sup>6</sup> Asatpur in the Achalapur taluq of Amaravati district may be the modern representative of Āśvatthanagara.

ATAPURA

It occurs in Dharanikota Dharmacakra pillar inscription.<sup>7</sup> P. Seshadri Sastri takes the term Atapura as corresponding to āṛḍhapaura, meaning "inhabitant of Ṛddhapura".<sup>8</sup> Ṛddhapura is modern Rithpur in the Amaravati district of Maharashtra.

ATHAKANAGARA

Athakanagara is mentioned in a Sanchi stūpa inscription.<sup>1</sup> The place is unidentifiable so far.

AYODHYĀ

Karmdāṇḍā inscription<sup>2</sup> of the reign of Kumāragupta mentions a worshipper of Lord Mahādeva, who had come from Ayodhyā. Similarly, Damodarpur inscription<sup>3</sup> of the Gupta year 224 refers to the Kulaputra Amṛtadeva, who hailed from Ayodhyā in connection with the grant of land to the God Śvetavarāhasvāmin. Lakṣa Praśasti<sup>4</sup> describes the penegyric as ayodhyeśah. Moreover, the spurious Gayā copper-plate inscription<sup>5</sup> of Samudragupta was issued from the city of Ayodhyā. The city of Ayodhyā is represented by the modern site of Ayodhyā about six miles from the Faizabad Railway station, in Uttar Pradesh. It was situated on the river Saryū, which is identical with modern Ghagrā or Gogṛā.

During Śuṅga period, Ayodhyā seems to have been included in the kingdom of Dhanadeva, the Lord of Kosala.<sup>6</sup> It was the seat of a jaya-skandhāvāra in Gupta period.

In ancient times, there was direct route for Ayodhyā from Tāmralipti. We find a record of three merchant brothers, who had gone to Tāmralipti from Ayodhyā on business.

It is of no use to repeat numerous references regarding Ayodhyā from Brahmanical, Buddhistic & Jain literature and from the accounts of the Chinese pilgrims. These references are given in detail in B. C. Law's works, Historical Geography of Ancient India and Indological Studies, Part III.

BĀṆAPURA

Bāṇapura is mentioned in Chukuttur plates<sup>7</sup> of Simhavarman and Kondunjeruvu plates<sup>8</sup> of Avinīta. The place has not been

BĀRĀṆASĪ

It appears in the Sarnath image inscription<sup>1</sup> of Kaniska. Therein, it is mentioned as 'bhaguvata-cāṇkama', i.e., a place where Lord Buddha used to walk. Jogimara cave inscription<sup>2</sup> mentions an inhabitant of Bālāpasī. Now-a-days, the place is known as Varanasi. The place is named after two rivulets, the Baranā and the Asī. Their joint stream might have communicated the name to the city, which was the capital of the Kāśī-janapada.<sup>3</sup> The extent of the city is mentioned as twelve yojanas in the Jātakas.<sup>4</sup> The author of Kāvya-mīmāṃsā refers to it in connection with the Western limit of pūrva-deśa.<sup>5</sup> Buddhistic literature gives us the information of certain ancient roads, which linked the city of Vārāṇasī to Ukkacela.<sup>6</sup> Hiuen-tsang travelled on the road running from Vārāṇasī to Ukkacela for some distance, after crossing the Gaṅgā somewhere near modern Arrah.<sup>7</sup>

BENĀKĀṬAKA

An inhabitant of Benākāṭaka is mentioned in a Bharhut inscription<sup>8</sup> lying at Allahabad Museum. In one of the Nasik cave inscriptions, a ruler of Śātavāhana dynasty is associated with Benākāṭaka.<sup>9</sup> The name of the town indicates that it was a camp or metropolis on the river Benā. The place in question is connected with Govardhana in the Nasik district.

BHARUKACCHA

It occurs in the following inscriptions :

1. Junnar inscription No. 19.<sup>10</sup>
2. Mathura Buddhist image inscription.<sup>11</sup>

1. EI, VIII, p. 176.
2. Proceedings of Fourth Oriental Conference, p. 701.

4. Kaira plates<sup>2</sup> of Dadda II, G. 380.

Bharukaccha literally means a high coast-land. It is identical with Broach, the headquarters of a district in Gujarat. Bharukaccha was the important city in the Antar-Narmadā-viṣaya during the middle of the 6th century A.D. It was the headquarters of a viṣaya of the same name in the 6th-7th century A.D.

According to the Greek geographer Ptolemy, Barygaza (the same as Broach) was a large city situated about thirty miles from the sea on the north side of the river Narmada.<sup>3</sup> Hiuen-tsang described it to be 2400 or 2500 li in circuit.<sup>4</sup> The soil was impregnated with salt. In early centuries of the Christian era, Bharukaccha was an important seat of sea-going trade and commerce. From Ujjayini, every commodity for local consumption was brought down to this place.<sup>5</sup>

BHOGAVADHANA

Bhogavadhana is mentioned in three Sanchi stūpa inscriptions<sup>6</sup> and in one<sup>7</sup> of the Bharhut inscriptions. It was the headquarters of a viṣaya of the same name. It has been identified with Bhokardhan in Bhokardhan taluq in Aurangabad district. At Bhokardhan, a large Brahmanical cave temple of about 8th century A.D. has recently been excavated.<sup>8</sup>

BRAHMAPURA

The town of Brahmapura is mentioned in Jhar and Sorath grants<sup>9</sup> of Dharasena II. The place lay near Vajdi, which is about thirty kilometres from Junagadh.

BRAHMAPURAKA or BRAHMAPŪRAKA

This place is mentioned in Seoni and Patna Museum grants<sup>10</sup> of Pravarasena II. Seoni grants place Brahamapūra in Bennākā-

Dr. Altekar had suggested the identification of Brahmapuraka with Brahmanawada near Achaipur in the Amaravati district.<sup>1</sup> But the villages which lay on the four sides of Brahmapuraka could not be traced in the vicinity of Brahmanawada. Dr. Mirashi seems to be more exact by identifying Brahmapuraka with Bamhani, six miles from the Amgaon Railway station and twelve miles from Balaghat.<sup>2</sup> The village Bamhani falls on the road, which connects Lalbura to Samanapur.

CĀMDRAPURA or CĀDDHAPURA

This place is mentioned in Tirodi Plates<sup>3</sup> of Pravarasena II. As suggested by Dr. Mirashi, it may be identified with Chandpur, which lies only twelve miles to the south-east of Kosamba and which contains an old fort.

CANDRAPURA

Dudia Plates<sup>4</sup> of Pravarasena II mention the city of Candrapura. As shown by R. B. Hiralal, Candrapura is probably identical with Chandur in the Amaravati district of Maharashtra. At Chandur, there is a confluence of two rivers, Candrabhāgā and Sarasvatī. Dr. Mirashi, however, inclined to identify Candrapura with Chanda, the chief town of Chanda district. The old name of this town is still current in that area. There is a confluence of two rivers, Erai and Jharpat, and the town is situated in the angle formed by these two rivers.<sup>5</sup>

CANDRAPURA

Candrapura is mentioned in Siroda Plates<sup>6</sup> of Devarāja, and in Goa Copper-plate inscription<sup>7</sup> of Candravarman. It has been identified with Chandor of Goa.<sup>8</sup> This Candrapura was the capital of the Gomins.

CANDRAPURA

Another Candrapura occurs in Indor Copper-plate inscription<sup>1</sup> of Skandagupta. The name is sometimes read as Indrapura also. It seems to be identical with Indor, the findspot, in Anupshahr tahsil of Bulandshahr district in Uttar Pradesh.

CARMAPURA

It appears in Tuṇḍigrāma grant<sup>2</sup> of Vikramendra III. It was situated in Vaiyerakara district.

CERUPURA

Cerupura is found in Chipurpalli grant<sup>3</sup> of Viṣṇuwardhana. It was situated in Pḷaki-viṣaya. It is identical with Chipurpalli, the chief town of the sub-division of the same name in Visakhapatnam district.

CINTAPURA

Kanteru Plates<sup>4</sup> of Skandavarman refer to the city of Cintapura. It was situated in the district of Kudrāhāra. As suggested by K. V. Lakshman Rao, Cintapur may be identified with the present village of Chinnapuram in Bandar taluq of Krishna district.<sup>5</sup>

CUKHSĀ

Cukhsa is mentioned in Taxila Copper-plate inscription<sup>6</sup> of Patika, and Taxila Silver Vase inscription<sup>7</sup> of Jihonika. According to Sir Aurel Stein, it is identical with modern Chach, north-west of Taxila in the North of Attock district. Cukhsa is similar to a curious Sanskrit word coṣka, which according to Trikūṇḍaśeṣa means a horse from the districts on the Indus. It is possible that coṣka is another form of Cukhsa and it denoted some particular district on the Indus.<sup>8</sup>

DĀHANUKA-NAGARA

The town of Dāhanuka-nagara is mentioned in one of the Nasik cave inscriptions.<sup>1</sup> The place may be identified with Dahanu in Thana district of Maharashtra.<sup>2</sup>

DANTAPURA

Dantapura is mentioned in the following grants of the rulers of the Gaṅga dynasty :

1. Jirjingi Plates<sup>3</sup> of Indravarman, Gaṅga year 39.
2. Purle Plates<sup>4</sup> of Indravarman, Gaṅga year 149.

The place has been variously identified. Cunningham located it at Rajahmundry.<sup>5</sup> Subba Rao places it in the neighbourhood of Sirkakulam.<sup>6</sup> Sylvain Levi identified it with Paloura of Ptolemy.<sup>7</sup> N. L. Dey suggested that Dantapura may be identical with Danton on the river Kasai in Midnapore district.<sup>8</sup> He also supported the traditional view of its identification with Puri in Orissa. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar identifies it with Kaliṅga-nagara.<sup>9</sup> A. W. Oldham suggests to look for Dantapura somewhere near the embouchure of the Vamśadhāra either at or near the ancient Sindhapura.<sup>10</sup> It is generally believed that Dantapura survives in the name in that of the fort of Dantavakra near Sirkakulam, north-east of Visakhapatnam, and near the mouth of the river Languliya. It was the capital of Kaliṅga. The Jirjingi plates refer to it as beautiful city lying with Amarāvati, the city of Gods. The place had a Buddhistic association in that the left canine tooth of the Buddha is said to have been brought over there by one of the Master's disciples and a stūpa was built over that. Subsequently, the tooth was taken away to Ceylon. The Jātakas refer several times to this city, which fact doubtlessly establishes its antiquity. Dantapura may be Pliny's Dandagula, lying six hundred twenty-five miles from the mouth of the Gaṅgā. The Mahābhārata mentions the city Dantakura, where Lord Kṛṣṇa crushed the Kaliṅgas.<sup>11</sup>

DARPAPURA

It appears in a charter<sup>1</sup> of Viṣṇuṣeṇa. It is probably identical with Dabhoi, about thirty-eight miles north-east of Broach.

DAŚAPURA

The city of Daśapura is mentioned in the following inscriptions :

1. Nasik Cave inscription<sup>2</sup> of Usavadjita.
2. Nasik Cave inscription.<sup>3</sup>
3. Mandsaur Stone inscription<sup>4</sup> of Govindagupta, M. S. 524.
4. Mandsaur Stone inscription<sup>5</sup> of Kumāragupta and Bandhuvarman, M.S. 493 and 529.
5. Mandsaur Pillar inscription<sup>6</sup> of Yaśogupta.
6. Sankheda Plates<sup>7</sup> of Dadā II, K. 392.
7. Sankheda Plates<sup>8</sup> (second set) of Dadā II, K. 392.
8. Ngawa Plates<sup>9</sup> of Dhruvasena II, G. 321.

Daśapura is identical with Mandsaur, the headquarters of the district of the same name in Madhya Pradesh. It is situated on the Ajmer-Khandwa (M.G.) line of the Western Railways. The present town of Mandsaur stands on the bank of the rivulet Shīvna, a tributary of the sacred river of Shipra. The city has been described in Mandsaur inscription of Kumāragupta and Bandhuvarman as embraced by two charming rivers (probably Shivna and Sumli) and decorated with the rows of the storeyed mansions like those of the aerial chariots and with paintings. The houses were high, resembling the peaks of white clouds lit up with the forked lightning or the lofty peaks of the mount Kailāsa.

The Mandsaur inscription further tells the story of a temple of the Sun God constructed by the guild of the silk-weavers at the city called Daśapura. In course of time, part of the temple fell into disrepair. It was once again reconstructed by the same philanthropic guild. The city was decorated with the best of the buildings as the cloudless sky is decorated with the moon. Kālidāsa also has made a passing reference to the beauties of Daśapura in Megha-dūta.<sup>1</sup>

About the origin of the name of the city, a story of a King Udayana and ten princes is narrated in the Jain work Parīṣiṣṭa-parvan.<sup>2</sup> The king managed to erect some fortification, which was called by the name of Daśapura by the traders who had accommodated themselves, attracted by the royal encampment. The Mahābhārata speaks of Daśapura as a capital city of king Rantideva, a descendant of the solar race.<sup>3</sup>

Nasik inscriptions indicate that by the second century A.D., Daśapura had earned the reputation of not only a flourishing and politically important town but also a religious centre. The inscription of Govindagupta mentions that Dattabhāṣa got constructed here a stūpa and a vihāra.

DAŚANAPURA

The place occurs in the Darsī grant<sup>4</sup> of Kumāraśiṣṇu, and in the Manglur grant<sup>5</sup> of Siṃhavarman II. Both the grants are dated from this place. Daśanapura has been identified with Darsī in Nellore district. Moreover, Palakkāḍa of the Uruvupalli grant of Siṃhavarman is sometimes considered as the Telugu equivalent of Daśanapura.<sup>6</sup>

DEVAPURAM

Siripuram Plates<sup>7</sup> of Anantavarman mention the city of Devapuram. As suggested by Srinivasa Rao, it may be identified with one of the two Zamindari villages—one named Devad in the Srungavarapukota taluq of the Visakhapatnam district and the other named Devadī in the Srikakulam taluq of the district of the same name.<sup>8</sup> Devapuram was the capital of Anantavarman. It is possible that Devapuram gave the name to the kingdom of Deva-rāṣṭra, which is mentioned in the Allahabad pillar inscription of Samudragupta.<sup>9</sup>

DHAMNĀKAḌA

There are many variants of Dhamṇakaḍa, which are known to us from inscriptions. These variants are Dhamṇakaḍa, Dhamṇakaṭa, Dhanakaṭa or Dhānyakaṭa. The place occurs in the following records :

1. Amaravati Buddhist rail inscription.<sup>1</sup>
2. Amaravati Buddhist sculpture inscription.<sup>2</sup>
3. Nasik eave inscription<sup>3</sup> of Pulumāvi.
4. Mayidavolu Plates<sup>4</sup> of Śivaskandavarman.
5. Dharanikoṭa Dharmacakra Pillar inscription.<sup>5</sup>
6. Uppugundur inscription<sup>6</sup> of Virapurisdata.
7. Amaravati inscription<sup>7</sup> of Simhavarman II.
8. Chezarla Temple inscription<sup>8</sup> of Kandarā.

Most probably the place Dhamṇakaḍa is identical with Amaravati situated about thirty-two kilometres north-west of Guntur in the Sattenepalli taluq of the Guntur district of Andhra Pradesh.<sup>9</sup> With Dharanikoṭa, it shared importance as the metropolis of Andhrapatha. Dharanikoṭa appears to be the later name of ancient Dhamṇakaḍa, meaning the corn-town. Hiuen-tsang in his visit to Dhanakaṭaka (same as Dhamṇakaḍa) found there a 'great Buddhist monastery, which was inhabited by the Bhikkus of the Mahāyāna school'.<sup>10</sup> He was struck with the beauty and magnificence of the religious edifices of Dhanakaṭaka. Dharanikoṭa appears to have been one of the early strongholds of the Andhra power. Amaravati is famous for its stūpa with exquisite carved sculptures and as the seat of a temple of Śiva known as Amareśvara. The importance of the temple is due to its location on the river Krishna.

DHENUKĀKAṬA or—ḌA

This place is recorded in seventeen out of the thirty-seven inscriptions discovered at Karle and once each in the inscriptions

1. Tree and Serpent Worship, 1873, p. 286.

2. ASSI, Burgess, I, p. 90.

discovered at Selarvadi and Kanheri.<sup>1</sup> Cunningham identified Dhenukākāṣa with Dhanakāṣaka of Hiuen-tsang and with modern Dharanikot on the river Krishna.<sup>2</sup> E. H. Johnston proposed to identify Dhenukākāṣa with Ptolemy's Dounga, and proposed its further identification with Domgri on Salsette island, opposite Bassein.<sup>3</sup> D. D. Kosambi rejects the identification of Dhenukākāṣa with Domgri. He does not find any justification in assumption that Dhenukākāṣa was Greek settlement on the coast. To him, it is certain that there is ancient connection between the village Devghar and the Karle cāitya.<sup>4</sup> J. A. B. Palmer points out that the collection of the caves at Karle, Bhaja and Bedsa indicates the existence of some substantial place nearby and this may have been Dhenukākāṣa. The place could have been in the Talegaon Dabhade and Khamset area. Another location would be the modern town of Dhond, where the Bor Ghat - Ter Road would have crossed the Bhima river.<sup>5</sup>

Many of the donors in the cāitya caves are Dhenukākāṣans and the excavation seems today primarily a monument to their generosity. The wooden ceiling arches of the cāitya cave at Karle were covered with paintings; most of the pillar shafts bearing traces of the pigmented plaster were also painted.<sup>6</sup>

DHRUVILĀṬĪ

Dhruvilāṭī is mentioned in the grants<sup>7</sup> of the time of Dharmāditya and Gopacandra. Pargiter has identified it with Dhulat, about twenty-eight miles W.N.W. of Faridpur town. Being a flourishing place, it attracted a community of the Brāhmaṇas to settle there. A large number of Mahattaras there is also significant to realize its importance. Pargiter postulates the possibility of its being the capital of a viśaya.

DHUTIPURA

It is noticed as the name of a city in Yekkeri rock inscription<sup>1</sup> of the time of Pulikeśin II. The town should have been in the vicinity of Saundatti, the chief village of Parasgad taluq of Belgaum district, Mysore State.

GIRINAGARA

Girinagara is mentioned in the following inscriptions :

1. Junagadh Rock inscription<sup>2</sup> of Rudradāman.
2. Junagadh inscription<sup>3</sup> of the grandson of Jayadāman.
3. Prince of Wales Museum grant<sup>4</sup> of Dhruvasena II.

Girinagara is identical with the ancient representative of the present city of Junagadh, the district headquarters in Gujarat. The name of the ancient city is traceable in the name of the hill near Junagadh, i. e., the Girnar hill, which is called Ūrjayat in the Junagadh inscriptions. The fact tends to indicate that the ancient city stood closer to the hill, and perhaps on the rising ground at the foot of it.<sup>5</sup> Girinagara has been the metropolis of the province of Surāṣṭra from the Mauryan period down to the Gupta rule in Surāṣṭra. The significance of the place is enhanced due to the history of the dams built, damaged and re-built over the Sudarśana lake. According to Uttarādhyayana,<sup>6</sup> Neminātha, one of the Jaina Tīrthāṅkaras and spiritual guide of the king Dattāt-reya died at Girnar.

GIRINAGARA

Another Girinagara is mentioned in Lohaner Plates<sup>7</sup> of Pulakeśin II. There is a village Gīrnara in each of the taluqs of Igatpuri, Malegaon, Nasik and Beglan of the Nasik district. Probably Gīrnara in Beglan taluq represents the ancient Girinagara.

GOVARDHANA

It occurs in the eight Nasik Cave inscriptions, five concerning with the Sātavāhanas, two with Uṣavādāta and one with Ābhīra ruler Iṣvarasena.<sup>8</sup> Govardhana was situated near the Trīṣaṣṭi hills. It was the headquarters of a territorial division named after it. There is even now a famous place of pilgrimage at Govardhan-Gangapura, on the right bank of the Godavari about six miles west of Nasik.<sup>1</sup> Nasik Cave inscriptions narrate that donations of various villages, rest-houses, caves and coconut trees were made at the city of Govardhana. The Purāṇas refer, in connection with the river Godavari, to a pradeśa where stood Govardhanapura.<sup>2</sup> Along the northern slopes of the Sahya mountain, where the river Godavari flows, is a distinct conspicuous for its beauty in the whole world ; (there stands the charming city of Govardhana belonging to the highminded Bhārgava).

Nasik cave inscription of Uṣavadāta refers to investment in Weaver's guild dwelling at Govardhana.<sup>3</sup>

HALAṆPŪRA

The term halaṇpūra-sāmi, meaning, Lord of Halaṇpūra occurs in Gurzala inscription.<sup>4</sup> The city of Halaṇpūra seems to be identical with Alampur in old Nizam dominion. It is situated at the apex of Raichur Doab on the western bank of the Tungabhadra, at a little distance before its junction with the Krishna.

HASTAVAPRA or HASTAKAVAPRA

The place is mentioned in the following grants :

1. Vala grant<sup>5</sup> of Dhruvasena I.
2. Prince of Wales Museum grant<sup>6</sup> of Dhruvasena I.
3. Bhavnagar grant<sup>7</sup> of Dharasena II.

Hastavapra or Hastakavapra was the headquarters of a territorial division (āhāra) named after it. It has been identified with Hathah in the Gogho taluq of the Bhavnagar district, about fifteen miles south-east of Bhavnagar, six miles to the south of Gogho and two miles to the south of Koliyak.

HIRAṆYA-NADĪ-VĀSAKA

The place is noticed in Chicholi Plates<sup>8</sup> of Pravaraśena II. It has been taken identical with Hiranyapura, the headquarters of the bhoga of the same name mentioned in Dudia grant of Pravarasena II. The place is to be traced somewhere on the banks of the river Irai (Hiranya) in Warora tahsil of Akola district.

INDRAPURA or INDRĀPURA

The place has already been referred to under the title, Candrapura (p. 66). The name occurs in Indor grant of Skandagupta. The inscription records the perpetual maintenance of a lamp in a temple of the Sun at Indrapura.

INDUPURA

Indupura-ghaṭikā, meaning, an institution existed at Indupura, is mentioned in Tummeyanuru grant<sup>1</sup> of Pulakesin II. Indupura is unidentified so far.

ISILĀ

Isilā was a seat of government in the Deccan ruled over by a mahāmātra. It is mentioned in the Brahmagiri and Siddapur Rock inscriptions of Aśoka.<sup>2</sup> It has been identified with modern Siddapur in the Chitradurga district of the Mysore State.

JĀLANDHARA

Jālandhara is mentioned in Māghā Prasasti<sup>3</sup> of Lakha Mandal. It is identical with Jullundur, the headquarters of a district of the same name in Punjab. According to Padmapurāṇa (Uttara-khaṇḍa), it was the capital of the great daiya king, Jālandhara.<sup>4</sup> During the first half of the seventh century A.D., when the Chinese pilgrim Hiuen-tsang reached the country called She-lan-ta-lo (Jālandhara), the city of Jālandhara was twelve or thirteen li in circuit.<sup>5</sup>

JAYAPURA

It occurs in the following inscriptions :

(1) Pali grant<sup>6</sup> of Mahārāja Lakṣmana.

1. Andhra-Pradesh Museum inscriptions, p. 45.

(2) Penugonda Plates<sup>1</sup> of Hastivarman.

Jayapura may be identified with the present Jaypore contiguous to the Ganjam district in Orissa.<sup>2</sup>

KAILĀSAPURA

Mallar Plates<sup>3</sup> of Śivagupta mention the city of Kailāsapura. It was situated in Taraḍarṣaka-bhoga. The city may correspond to any one of the villages called Kesla in Bilaspur and Janjgir tahsils of Bilaspur district in Madhya Pradesh, particularly to that which is eight miles south-east to Mallar.

KALĪṄGA-NAGARA

It appears in the following records :

1. Hathigumpha inscription<sup>4</sup> of Khāravela.
2. Narasingapalli Plates<sup>5</sup> of Hastivarman, Gaṅga year 79.
3. Utlam Plates<sup>6</sup> of Hastivarman, Gaṅga year 80.
4. Achyutpuram Plates<sup>7</sup> of Indravarman, Gaṅga year 87.
5. Santa-Bammoli Plates<sup>8</sup> of Indravarman, Gaṅga year 87.
6. Parlakimedi grant<sup>9</sup> of Indravarman, Gaṅga year 91.
7. Srikakulam grant<sup>10</sup> of Indravarman, Gaṅga year 128.
8. Andhavaram grant<sup>11</sup> of Indravarman, Gaṅga year 132.
9. Srikakulam grant<sup>12</sup> of Indravarman, Gaṅga year 138.
10. Purle Plates<sup>13</sup> of Indravarman, Gaṅga year 149.

Exact location of Kalīṅga-nagara is uncertain. Generally, it is taken to be identical with Mukhalingam on the Vamsadhara and the adjacent ruins in Ganjam district.<sup>14</sup> Fleet seems inclined to identify it with Kalingapatam, twenty miles north-east of Srikakulam.<sup>15</sup> Jayaswal identifies the capital of Khāravela with Tosali.<sup>1</sup> B. B. Lal<sup>2</sup> has given a new suggestion. According to him, Kalinga-nagara of the Khāravela's inscription may be identical with Sisupalgarh, one and a half mile to the south-east of the town of Bhubaneswar. According to B. M. Barua the city of Kalinga is Kbibira and it was situated somewhere on the banks of the river Prāci, and not far from Bhubaneswar and the Udayagiri and Khandagiri caves.<sup>3</sup> It may be proposed that the capital of Kalinga was located at different places, and the metropolis of this state could as well be Sisupalgarh for sometime, then designated as Kalinga-nagara.

The Hathigumpha inscription mentions that Khāravela repaired the buildings, walls and gates in the city of Kalinga, which were badly damaged by the stormy wind, raised the embankments of the Isitala tank, and restored all damaged gardens. It also mentions the erection of a royal palace on both the banks of the river Prāci, the palace was built possibly in Kalinga-nagara itself. The record also mentions a canal, which was extended upto the city.

KALŪRAPURA, KALLŪRA

The place is mentioned in Maruturu grant<sup>4</sup> of Pulikeśin II. Kallur is a well-known place in the Guntur district.

KANṬAKASELA

It occurs in Nāgārjunakoṇḍa Second Apsidal temple inscription.<sup>5</sup> In one of the Amaravati inscriptions<sup>6</sup>, we come across the term Kaṭakasolaka, which means, the inhabitant of Kaṭakasola (i.e., Kanṭakasela). The place-name is given as Kanṭakasola in Ghantasala Pillar inscription.<sup>7</sup> The town of Ghantasala, close to the mouth of the Krishna, in Krishna district of Andhra Pradesh, is modern representative of Kanṭakasela.

According to the Nāgārjunakoṇḍa inscription, there was among other things a stone maṇḍapa at the eastern gate of mahācetiya at Kanṭakasela. This town was known to Ptolemy, who mentions the emporium of Kontakossyla immediately after the mouths of Maisolos, i.e., the river Krishna.<sup>1</sup> From this important fort in the second century A.D. a vivid trade was carried on between the Roman Empire and the Southern India. This sea-borne commerce, testified by the hoards of gold coins of Roman Emperors accounts for a thriving population of merchants at Kaṇṭakasela.<sup>2</sup>

KĀNCĪ or KĀNCĪPURA

The following inscriptions mention the famous city of southern India known as Kāñcī or Kāñcīpura :

1. Halsi grant<sup>3</sup> of Ravivarman.
2. Mayidavolu Plates<sup>4</sup> of Śivaskandavarman.
3. Hirahadagalli grant<sup>5</sup> of Śivaskandavarman.
4. Chendalur grant<sup>6</sup> of Kumāra-ṛiṣṇu II.
5. Vesanta Plates<sup>7</sup> of Sīrṇhavarman.
6. Aihole inscription<sup>8</sup> of Pulakeśin II.

Kāñcī or Kāñcīpura is now represented by Conjeevaram on the river Palar, forty-three miles south-west of Madras, in the Chingalēput district of Madras. It was the ancient capital of the Cola and the Pallava rulers. Most of the inscriptions of Pallava rulers are dated from Kāñcīpura. It was a famous seat of learning. Mayūraśarman went with his guru to this city to study the sacred writings and quickly entered the ghṛāṣikā as a mendicant.<sup>9</sup> Aihole inscriptions refers to the conquest of Kāñcīpura by Pulakeśin II, the Cālukya ruler.

The earliest reference to this place is in the Mahābhāṣya of Patañjali<sup>10</sup> It is identified by some with Satiyaputa of Aśoka's Rock-edicts, and in Pāli literature, it is noteworthy as the birth-place of the commentator Dhammapāla, and perhaps, also of Anurāddha, author of the Abhidhānamuttha Saṅgaha.<sup>11</sup> The

KANDARAPURA

Kandarapura, (Skt.) Kṛṣṇapura, is mentioned in the Mattepad Plates<sup>4</sup> of Dāmodarvarman and the Chezarla inscription<sup>5</sup> of Kandarā's grandson. Kandarapura was the capital of Kandarā janapada. As suggested by D. C. Sircar, it may be identical with Chezarla in Narasaropet taluq of the Guntur district.<sup>6</sup> There are more than seventy-eight shrines at Chezarla, and Kapoteśvara is the deity of the main temple there.<sup>7</sup>

KANDUKŪRA

It appears in Uruvupalli grant<sup>8</sup> of Viṣṇugopa. It is identical with Kandukur, the headquarters of the taluq of the same name in the Nellore district, Andhra Pradesh.

KAPIŚĀ

Kapiśā (Prakrit Kavisa) is mentioned in Maniklala Bronze Casket inscription.<sup>9</sup> It is identical with Kapis, situated ten miles west of Opian on the declivity of the Hindukush.<sup>10</sup> Ptolemy placed Kapiśā 2½ degrees southwards from Kabul.<sup>11</sup> According to Lassen, it is the valley of Gurbad rivers.<sup>12</sup> Julian supposed the district (of Kapiśā) to have occupied the Panjshir and Tagao valleys in the northern borders of Kohistan.<sup>13</sup> According to Hiuen-tsang, the country of Kapiśā was ten li in circuit.

KAPITTHIKĀ

The place is noticed in Madhuban Plate<sup>1</sup> of Harṣa. It is identical with ancient Sāmkāśya, which has been identified by Late Sir A. Cunningham with the present Sankisa, on the Kālī-nadī, about forty miles north-west of Kanauj.<sup>2</sup> Kapitthikā is Kie-pi-tha of Hiuen-tsang.<sup>3</sup> Moreover, it may be Kavittthaka-araama mentioned in the Jātaka.<sup>4</sup> During the seventh century A.D., Kapitthikā was the place of the military camp of Harṣavardhana.

KĀPURA or KĀPŪRA

Kāpura or Kāpūra is mentioned in Pardī Plates of Dahrasena, and in the Nasik Cave inscription of the time of Nahapāna-[Śaka] years 41, 42, 45.<sup>5</sup> It has been identified with Kapura in Songodh taluq of Surat district.<sup>6</sup> The old town of Kāpura gave its name to a territorial division known as Kāpurāhāra mentioned in two Nasik Pāṇḍu-leṇa cave inscriptions.<sup>7</sup>

KARAHĀKAṬA

It occurs in three Bharhut inscriptions.<sup>8</sup> In the Kuda inscription<sup>9</sup> is mentioned an inhabitant of Karahākaṭa, i.e., Karahākaṭa. This place is mentioned as Karahāṭaka in a Rāṣṭrakūṭa inscription<sup>10</sup> of Śaka year 675. Karahākaṭa is identical with Karad, the chief town of the Karad taluq in the Southern part of the Satara district, at the confluence of the Krishna and the Koyna.

KAUṆḌINYA-PURA

Kauṇḍinya-pura is mentioned in a grant<sup>11</sup> of Dharasena II. It has been identified with Kundinpur, nine miles to the west of Kuliana, thirty-two miles west of Junagadh and thirty-five miles to the east of Porbandar.<sup>12</sup> It is on the bank of the river Bhadera.

KEKĀPURA

It occurs in one of the Nāsik cave inscriptions.<sup>1</sup> Kekāpura is unidentified so far.

KEVUPURA

It appears in two Amaravati Buddhist inscriptions.<sup>2</sup> The place has so far not been identified.

KHARAPURĪ

Siripuram Plates<sup>3</sup> of Anantavarman record this name of a city. The city has been identified with Koraput, the headquarters of a district in Orissa.

KHAṬṬA

The town of Khavada is mentioned in Wardak Vase inscription<sup>4</sup> of the Śaka year 51. It is identical with Khawat in the district of Wardak, now in Afghanistan.

KHEṬAKA

Kheṭaka is mentioned in Alina grant<sup>5</sup> of Dharasena II. It has been identified with Kaira, the headquarters of the Kaira district in Gujarat. Bhavanagar Plates<sup>6</sup> of Dharasena III mention the name of the town as Kheṭaka-pradvāra. The name probably means the gates of the city of Kheṭaka.

KIKKAṬAPURA

Kikkaṭapura is recorded in a grant<sup>7</sup> of Dharasena IV. It was situated in Kālapaka-pathaka in Surāṣṭra. The place has been identified with Kotariya, less than eight miles to the north of Padana in Jamnagar district of Gujarat.

KOLLAPŪRAKA

The city of Kollapūra is recorded in Seoni grant<sup>8</sup> of Pravara-

KONDAVERUPŪR

The Koppāram Plates<sup>2</sup> of Pulakeśin II mention the name of the city of Konda-verupūr. The place has been identified with Kondavidu in Narasaraopet taluq of the Guntur district.<sup>3</sup>

KONGI-NAGARA

It occurs in Malavalli grant<sup>4</sup> of Mayūrasarman. The place is among one of the twelve villages granted by the king. These villages were in the vicinity of the Kalleśvara temple at Malavalli in Shikarpur taluq, Shimoga district, Mysore.

KONGODA, KAIṄGODA

Koṅgoda-vāsaka, that is, the town of Koṅgoda, is found in Khurda grant of Mādhava II.<sup>5</sup> In Buguda Plates<sup>6</sup> of Mādhavarman, the place is called Kaiṅgoda. The place has been identified with Koṅgoda in the Ramgiri Agency of the Ganjam district in Orissa.<sup>7</sup> It was the headquarters of Koṅgoda-maṇḍala, which appears in the inscription of Śaśaṅka.<sup>8</sup>

KOSAṂBĪ

The earliest mention of Kosambī is found in Kauśāmbī Pillar Edict<sup>9</sup> of Aśoka. During the time of Aśoka, Kosambī, Skt. Kauśāmbī, was the headquarters of a province.<sup>10</sup> The place is identical with Kosam, a village twenty-eight miles south-west of Allahabad and about eight miles to the south of Karari, the chief town of Karari pargana in the Manjhanpur tahsil of the Allahabad district.<sup>11</sup> The spade of archaeologist has uncovered the ruins of the city of Kauśāmbī, which lie at Kosam, above mentioned village. Among other things, eight inscriptions of the Magha dynasty come from the village of Kosam. Five Bandhogarh inscriptions of the third century A.D. mention a merchant, who belongs to Kosambī.<sup>1</sup> One of the Bharhut inscriptions<sup>2</sup> also refers to the city of Kosamba, i.e., Kauśāmbī. The city of Kauśāmbī was an important shopping place of the persons travelling along the great trade route connecting Sāketa and Sāvasthī in the north with Patishāna or Paithan on the bank of the Godāvarī in the south.

Ruins of Ghosītārāma, one of the Buddhist establishments, have been excavated from the Kosam recently. Patañjali mentions the city in his Mahābhāṣya. It continued to flourish under the occupation of the Kushanas, Maghas and the Guptas. A seal bearing the appellation Hūṇarāja and another counter-struck with the name of Toramāṇa speak of its occupation and destruction by the Hūṇas. When Hiuen-tsang visited the place, the ten Buddhist monasteries of the Hīnayānists noticed by him were in ruins. The people were enterprising, fond of arts, and cultivated religious merit.<sup>3</sup>

KRĪPURA

Krīpura is mentioned as the name of a city in Gunaighar grant<sup>4</sup> of Valmyagupta. The place belonged to the present Tippura district of Bangla Desh.

KṚṢṆAPURA

The place is mentioned in Yekkari rock inscription<sup>5</sup> of Pulakesin II. The town should be located in the vicinity of Yekkeri in Parasgad taluq of Belgaum district, Mysore State.

KUḌALŪR

It occurs as the name of a town in Hebbata grant<sup>6</sup> of Viṣṇuvarman, and in Kuḍalūr grant<sup>7</sup> of Mādhavavarman. The place was situated in Marukara-viṣaya. It has been identified with Kodlapura, about one mile to the north-east of Perur. The neighbourhood of Kodlapura is full of ancient ruins.

KUḌĀVĀḌA

Ipur grant<sup>1</sup> of Mādhavavarman was issued from the victorious camp of Kuḍāvāḍa. The place may be identical with Gudivada in Krishna district, Andhra Pradesh.

KUDŪRA or KŪDŪRA

Following inscriptions refer to the city called Kudūra or Kūdūra :

1. Amaravati Buddhist sculpture inscription.<sup>2</sup>
2. Kondamudi Plates of Jayavarman.<sup>3</sup>

The place is identical with Koddoura in the country of Maisolia (Masulipatam) mentioned in the Geography of Ptolemy.<sup>4</sup> It is represented by Kuduru, four miles from Masulipatam and six miles from Ghantasala, the Kantakossyla mart of Ptolemy, close to the mouth of Maisolos or the Krishna.<sup>5</sup> The town of Kudūra was the political centre of Kudūrāhāra.

KURUPŪRA

The place is referred to in Uruvupalli grant<sup>6</sup> of Simhavarman. It has been identified with Kared alias Kandukur in the taluq of the same name in Nellore district.<sup>7</sup> Kurupūra was situated in the country called Muṇḍarāṣṭra.

KUVALĀLA

It occurs in Hosakote Plates<sup>8</sup> of Avinṭa. The town of Kuvalāla is identical with Kolar, the district headquarters in Mysore.

LENDULŪRA

The town of Lendulūra is mentioned in Chikkula Plates<sup>9</sup> of Vikramendravarman III. It has been identified with Dandaluru, a village on the ruins of the city of Veṅgī, about five miles north-east of Eluru in the Eluru taluq of the West Godavari district.<sup>1</sup>

LOHANAGARA

The place is noticed in Lohaner Plates<sup>2</sup> of Pulakeśin II. It is identical with Lohaner in Beglan taluq of the Nasik district, Maharashtra.

MADHURĀ

See s. v. Mathurā.

MAHĀSENAPURA

The name occurs in the Bangalore Museum grant<sup>3</sup> of Koṅgaṇi Mahārāja Durvinita. The place remains unidentified so far.

MAHENDRAPURA

Mahendrapura occurs as the name of a city in Mahendravadi inscription<sup>4</sup> of Guṇabhadra. It has been identified with Mahendravadi, three miles east-south-east of the Sholinghur Railway station on the line from Arkonam junction to Arcot. The inscription records that the king Guṇabhadra caused to be cut out of the rock the temple of Viṣṇu, which bore the name Mahendra-viṣṇu-grha and stood on the bank of Mahendra-taṭāka, situated in Mahendrapura. The city, the tank, and the temple—all were named after Mahendra, the other name of king Guṇabhadra.

MĀHIṢMATĪ or MĀHISATĪ

Māhiṣmatī occurs in two grants of Suhandhu of early fifth century A.D.<sup>5</sup> We find the Prakrit forms Māhasatī, Māhisatī and Mahisatī in the Sanchi Stūpa inscriptions of about second century A.D.<sup>6</sup> Fleet identified Māhiṣmatī with Omkareshvara Mandhata, an island in the river Narmadā in the east Nimar district of Madhya Pradesh.<sup>7</sup> Mr. Wilford, however, proposed the identification of Māhiṣmatī with Maheshwar in the west Nimar district of Madhya Pradesh, about sixty miles south of Indore, facing each other on the southern and northern banks of the Narmadā respectively. Recent excavations carried out under the guidance of Dr. H. D. Sankalia support the view of Mr. Wilford.<sup>1</sup> Dr. Dasaratha Sarma has given evidences from the Jain sources, which further strengthen this very view.<sup>2</sup> It may be mentioned here that Sir A. Cunningham had identified the city of Māhishmati with the old town of Mandla.<sup>3</sup> But this identification is not convincing.<sup>4</sup>

The city of Māhishmati, according to Raghuvamśa, was guarded by the Fire God and was encircled by the Revā (i. e., Narmadā) like a girdle round its hip, like ramparts.<sup>5</sup> Maheshwar is a site where a moat might have been made round the city, so that the Narmadā, as it were, formed a girdle round it.

At Maheshwar, we find a large number of Śaiva and Viṣṇu temples, Buddhist stūpas and a continuous chain of moulds on both the banks of the Narmadā, proclaiming the antiquity of the site. Archaeological explorations have shown that the antiquity of the site is to be taken right back to pre-historic period through a proto-historic. A coin bearing the word Mahisati has been recently found from Maheshwar.<sup>6</sup>

MAJHIMIKĀ

Barli Pillar inscription<sup>7</sup> mentions an inhabitant of Majhimikā, (Skṛ. Mādhyamikā). Majhimikā may safely correspond to modern Nagari in the Chitorgarh district in Rajasthan. The attribute śālī-mālīnī in the Barli Pillar inscription possibly refers to the rice-fields that surrounded the town. At Mādhyamikā, as we find in the Mahābhārta,<sup>8</sup> the people known as Vājadhanas had a settlement there.

MALAKETAKA

Malaketaka is mentioned in Mudhol Plates<sup>9</sup> of Pugavarman. It seems to be identical with Malkhed in the Gulharga district, Mysore State. Malakeṣaka is the same as Mānyakheṣa, the renowned capital of the Rāṣṭrakūṭas.

MĀNAPURA

Mānapura, first of all, occurs in Khoh grant of Sarvanātha of 533 A.D.<sup>1</sup> A temple of the goddess Piṣṭapurikādevī is said to have been build at the town of Mānapura in the above mentioned inscription. Dr. Fleet proposed to identify the town of Mānapura with present Manpur near the river Son, about forty-five miles in a south-easterly direction from Uchahra and thirty-two miles north-east of Karitalai.<sup>2</sup>

There is a mention of another Mānapura in Updikavāṣṭikā grant<sup>3</sup> of Abhimanyu. Dr. Fleet previously proposed to identify it with Mānapura, in Malwa, twelve miles south-west of Mhow.<sup>4</sup> But later he proposed another place having the same name near Bandhogarh in Rewa district, Madhya Pradesh as a representative of ancient Mānapuram.<sup>5</sup> Professor Mirashi, however, is inclined to identify it with Man—the chief place of the Man sub-division of the Satara district, Maharashtra—through which flows the Mān-gaṅgā, a tributary of the Bhīmā river.<sup>6</sup> Mānapura seems to be the capital of Abhimanyu, the Rāṣṭrakūṭa king, and the name of the town seems to be derived from Mānāka, the name of the great grandfather of Abhimanyu.

MAṆGALAPURA

Maruturu grant<sup>7</sup> of Pulakeśin II refers to the town of Maṅgalapura. The place is to be located somewhere in Guntur district.

MATHURĀ

Hathigumpha inscription<sup>8</sup> of Kharavela refers to the city called Madhurā, i.e., Mathurā, the famous city of the Śūrasenas. In five other inscriptions<sup>9</sup>, four discovered from Mathura or from its neighbourhood and one discovered at Bandhogarh, mention the persons belonging to this city. The mention of the inhabitants of Mathurā in Jaina inscriptions of the Kushana period is a proof of its being the centre of Jainism during that period. The majority of the inscriptions found at Mathurā are Jain in character. An inscription<sup>1</sup> of the time of Candragupta II dated in the year 61 of the Gupta era refers to Śaiva establishments of the Lakulīśa sect in this city.

MUSIKANAGARA

Hathigumpha inscription<sup>2</sup> of Khāravela describes a city, the name of which is generally taken as Musikanagara.<sup>3</sup> According to the inscription, the city was situated in the proximity to the river Kanhabennā, i.e., Krishna in the South. Dr. K.P. Jayaswal located the city of Musikanagara somewhere on the river Musi, near Golugonda in Andhra Pradesh<sup>4</sup>, while Dr. R. D. Banerji identified it with Muziris, a famous port on the western coast.<sup>5</sup> M. K. Dhavalikar has recently identified it with a tiny village Maski, on the river of the same name in the Lingsugur taluq, Raichur district, Mysore State. It is only about fifteen miles as the crow flies to the east of river Krishna.<sup>6</sup> Musikanagara is known to be the capital of Musikas, which are mentioned in the Mahābhārata,<sup>7</sup> as well as Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa.<sup>8</sup> In the Mahābhārata, the Musikas are coupled with the Vanavāsikas living in the region of Banawasi.<sup>9</sup>

NAMDAPURA

The city of Nāmidapura is mentioned in one of the Sanchi Stūpa inscriptions.<sup>10</sup> The place is unidentifiable.

NANDAPURAM

Another city Nandapuram is found in Siripuram

Plates<sup>1</sup> of Anantavarman. It has been identified with Nandapuram in old Jeypore estate in Visakhapatnam district in Andhra Pradesh.

NĀNDĪKAḌA

Nāndīkaḍa is mentioned in Dashim Plates<sup>2</sup> of Vindhyasakti II. It has been identified with Nanded. The name of Nāndīkaḍa shows that the locality stood on the bank (or in the valley) of the Nāndī (modern Mānyad). Nanded, however, stands on the Godavari, at a distance from the course of the Mānyad. To justify the name, we have probably to think that the Nāndī originally joined the Godavari, near Nāndīkaḍa.<sup>3</sup>

NANDINAGARA

The place is mentioned in one of the Bharhut inscriptions.<sup>4</sup> If it be the same as Nandigrāma of the Rāmāyaṇa, then it must be some town, such as Nundgaon in Uttar Pradesh.

NĀNDĪPURA, NĀNDĪPURĪ

The following inscriptions<sup>5</sup> mention this place :

- (1) Kaira Plates of Dadā II, 629 A.D.
- (2) Kaira Plates of Dadā II, 634 A.D.
- (3) Sankheda Plates of Dadā II, 641 A.D.
- (4) Sankheda Plates of Dadā II, 641 A.D.

It was identified by Buhler with an old fort of that name, just outside the Jhadeswar gate to the east of Broach.<sup>6</sup> Pandit Bhagwanlal Indraji, however, suggested that Nāndīpurī was identical with Nandod in the Broach district, situated on the Karjan river in the old Rajpipla State.<sup>7</sup> The statement in the Anjaneri Plates<sup>8</sup> of Jayabhata III that Nāndīpurī-vijaya included the village Toranaka (modern Toran, two miles to the north of Nandod) proves the correctness of the suggestion.

NANDISOMA or NANDISOMA-PURA

The place does not occur in any record. Nandsa Yūpa Pillar inscription,<sup>1</sup> however, refers to the king Nandisoma. The similarity of the name of the king with Nandsa, the findspot, gives the impression that the king should have founded the village Nandsa in Sahara district in Rajasthan and the village should have been at that time known by the name Nandisoma or Nandisoma-pura of which Nandsa is the later developed form.

NANDIVARDHANA

Nandivardhana, with its variants such as Nāndivardhana and Nandivardhana, occurs in the following inscriptions<sup>2</sup> of the fifth century A.D. :

- (1) Poona Plates of Prabhāvatiguptā.
- (2) Jamb grant of Pravarasena II.
- (3) Belora Plates of Pravarsena II.
- (4) Nagardhana Plates of Svāmīrāja.
- (5) Rithpur Plates of Bhavattavarman.

As suggested by R. B. Hirafal, the city of Nandivardhana is most probably identical with Nagardhan (or Nandardhana), four miles south of Ramtek and twenty-eight miles north of Nagpur.<sup>3</sup> T. A. Wellsted, however, mentions that there are stronger grounds for supposing that at Nandpur, one mile south-east of Nagardhan, we find the remains of the ancient Nandivardhana, and not at Nagardhana.<sup>4</sup> It may be noted here that Nandivardhana of the Rithpur Plates has been identified with Nandur of the Yeotmal taluq in the district of the same name in Maharashtra.<sup>5</sup> Nandivardhana was the capital of the Vākātakas, after the death of Pravarasena I. According to the Sindūra-giri-māhātmya, Nandivardhana was a holy place.<sup>6</sup>

NĀSIKA

Nāsika, one of the holiest places of the Hindus, finds mention in two Pāṇḍu Leṇa inscriptions, one Kanheri inscription, one Bharhut inscription and in one Bedsa cave inscription.<sup>7</sup> These inscriptions record the gifts of some person or the other hailing from Nāsika, which is known to this day by the same name, i.e., Nasik and is the headquarters of a district having same designation. These records are suggestive of the economic prosperity of the people of Nasik, their organised economic life and devotion to religion. The famous Nasik cave inscription of the region of Vāsiṣṭhīputra Siri Pulumāvi records the gift of a cave for the Bhadravāṇīyas by the great queen Gautamī Balaśrī, mother of Śrī Śātakarṇī.<sup>1</sup>

Nāsikya or Nāsika finds its earliest literary references in Kātyāyana's Vārtika and in Patañjali's Mahābhāṣya.<sup>2</sup>

Among the earliest archaeological remains is the cāitya cave dating from the Christian era. Archaeological remains here are associated with the twenty-three Pāṇḍu legas, the rock-cut caves, about three hundred feet above the road-level. Recent excavations carry the history of the city of Nasik to the proto-historic times, i.e., the period which ended in about the thirteenth century B.C. The city still retains its importance as a religious centre and a place of pilgrimage, especially at the Kumbha fair—once in twelve years. Tapobanaka, Tapovana and Panchavati are the sites of importance with a religious background, and these have added to the sanctity of the place.

NOACAA

The city of Noacaa is recorded in Taxila Silver scroll inscription of the year 136.<sup>3</sup> The name of the city may correspond to Śkt. Navācala.<sup>4</sup>

PABHĀSA

Pabhāsa-Tīrtha is mentioned in one of the Karle cave inscriptions.<sup>5</sup> The name is given as Prabhāsatīrtha in Nasik cave inscription<sup>6</sup> of the time of Nahapāna. The latter inscription records the donations given to the Brāhmaṇas by Usavadāta at this holy place. The place is the same as Prabhāsa or Somanātha-pattana in Kathiawar, where the epic legend locates the death of Lord

Kṛṣṇa. It is frequently mentioned in the Purāṇas.<sup>1</sup>

PĀDĀṆA

Pādāṇīya i.e. an inhabitant of Pādāṇa is mentioned in two Sanchi Stūpa inscriptions.<sup>2</sup> Buhler identified the place Pādāṇa with Parana.<sup>3</sup> Professor Raychaudhuri, however, suggests that Pādāṇa may represent the capital of the Āśmaka country, which was at a place styled Potali, Potana, Podana or Pauḍanya in literature, and which has been identified with Bodhan in Nizamabad district, Andhra Pradesh.<sup>4</sup>

PADDUKKARĀ-DHIṢṬHĀNA

Vilvattī grant<sup>5</sup> of Śiṃhavarman mentions the town Paddukkarā-dhiṣṭhāna. The town has been identified with Padugupadu, about nine miles south by east of Vavveru in the taluq of the same name. There is now a Railway station at this place, which falls on Madras-Calcutta line and within a mile from Konur.

PADMAPURA

The place is noticed in Drug (Mohalla) unfinished Vākāṭaka grant.<sup>6</sup> It has been identified with Padampur, two miles from Amgaon in Bhandara district. It was the last Vākāṭaka capital and the ancestral home of Bhavabhūti. The side of Padampur has yielded a good number of ancient relics, such as the images of Tīrthāṅkara Pārśvanātha and Ṛṣabhānātha and also those of the Paurāṇic gods like Viṣṇu etc.

PALAKKAḌA or PALĀKAṬA

Palakkaḍa or Palākaṭa occurs as the name of the capital of the Pallavas in Uruvupalli grant of Śiṃhavarman and in Chura grant of Viṣṇugopavarman.<sup>7</sup> Mr. Burnell identified the city with Palghat, the headquarters of a district.<sup>8</sup> He took Palakkaḍa as the Telugu equivalent of Daśanapura.<sup>1</sup> Both these suggestions have been questioned by the distinguished scholars like Dr. Hultsch and Dr. Fleet.<sup>2</sup> According to C. R. Krishnamachari, Palukuru in Kandukur taluq of the Nellore district might be taken identical with Palakkaḍa or Palākaṭa.<sup>3</sup> This identification is sound enough in as much as we know that the names of the villages, such as Pallava-Bālagopālapuram and Pallava-Bhuvanagirivāri in the vicinity of the Kandukur town point to the association of this tract with the Pallavas.<sup>4</sup>

PALĀŚIKĀ .

Following grants<sup>5</sup> of the Kadamba dynasty discovered at Halsi are all dated from the city of Palāśikā :

1. Halsi grant of Kākusthavarman, year 8.
2. Halsi grant of Mṛgeśavarman, year 8.
3. Halsi grant of Ravivarman, year 11.
- 4-5. Two Halsi grants of Ravivarman.
- 6-7. Two Halsi grants of Harivarman, year 4 & 5.

The city of Palāśikā is evidently identical with Halsi on the road to Nandigad, in the Bidi taluq of the Belgaum district, Mysore State.

PAN̄KTIPURA

Kirukuppatur grant<sup>6</sup> of Kṛṣṇavarman II mentions the city of Pan̄ktipura. In Kuntagani Plates<sup>7</sup> of Ravivarman, the district of Pan̄ktipura is mentioned. The city has been identified with modern Hangal in Dharwar district, Mysore State.

PĀṆḌĪPURA

Adur grant<sup>8</sup> of Kīrtivarman I refers to the city of Pāṇḍīpura, which is no other than the site of modern village Adur, about eight miles to the east of Hangal in the Dharwar district, Mysore State. The city is described in the Rāṣṭrakūṭa records of the 9th and the 10th centuries by the same name, but in later inscriptions of the Western Cālukyas and the Kadambas, we find it slightly changed as Pāṇḍiyur. Later on, by the loss of the initial letter, the name of the city adopted the similar form as stands to this day.

PĀŚAPURA

The city is referred to in Kattaacheruvu Plate<sup>1</sup> of Harivarman. It has been identified with the village Aduru in the East Godavari district. It is to be noted here that Pāśapura can be translated in Telugu as Taduru.

PĀṬALIPUTRA

It occurs as the name of a city in the Rock-edict V and the Sarnath Pillar inscription of Aśoka.<sup>2</sup> Three Bharhut inscriptions<sup>3</sup> also mention the city of Pāṭaliputra. A minister of the time of Candragupta II is mentioned in Udayagiri Cave inscription<sup>4</sup> to be the resident of Pāṭaliputra. Gadghwa Stone inscription<sup>5</sup> also mentions this city.

Pāṭaliputra is the Palibothra of the Greek historians—particularly Megasthenes, and the Pa-lin-fu of the Chinese pilgrims. Megasthenes has left a detailed account of this city, which was built near the confluence of the Gaṅgā, the Son and the Gandak. He informs us that 'this city stretched in the inhabited quarters to an extreme length on each side of eighty stadia, and its breadth was fifteen stadia and that a ditch encompassed it all round, which was six hundred feet in breadth and thirty cubits in depth, and that the wall was crowned with 570 towers and had four and sixty gates'.<sup>6</sup>

The Piṭakas give some information on the early history of Pāṭaliputra. The fortified city was founded by Ajātaśatru on the site of a village Pāṭaligāma in order to repel the Licchavis.<sup>7</sup> Pāṭaṅjali, illustrating the use of a certain proposition, says anulomam pāṭaliputram, which means, Pāṭaliputra on the Śoṇa.<sup>8</sup> The grammarian seems to have attached more importance to that part of the city, which was on the bank of Śnṣa—perhaps the most thickly populated.

During the rule of the Śuāgas and the Kaṇvas, the city may have fallen a prey to the ferocity of a foreign invasion.<sup>1</sup> But finally it fell victim to the vandalism of the Hūṇas.

According to Fa-hien, the royal palace and the halls in the midst of the city, the walls and the gates and the inlaid sculpture work seemed to be the work of super-human spirits.<sup>2</sup>

During the recent excavations in 1952-53, an inscription was found from a ruined structure engraved ārogya vihāra in Mauryan Brahmi. The Ārogya Vihāra may have been some kind of hospital or sanitorium in the neighbourhood of the hall.<sup>3</sup>

Pāṭaliputra had its two other names Puṣpapura and Kusumapura—both meaning the city of the flowers. Puṣpapura is mentioned in Allahabad Stone Pillar inscription<sup>4</sup> of Samudragupta, while Kusumapura is mentioned by Hsuen-tsang.<sup>5</sup>

PERNNAGARA

The name is engraved in Nallala inscription<sup>6</sup> of Durvinita and Mallohalli grant<sup>7</sup> of the same king. The place has been identified with Pennagara in Salem district in Madras.

PIṢṬAPURA

Ragolu Plates of Śaktivarman, and Tekkali grant of Umavarman both were issued from Piṣṭapura,<sup>8</sup> the royal seat of the Māthara dynasty. The city of Piṣṭapura finds further mention in Srungavarapukota Plates of Anantavarman, the ruler of Devarāṣṭra and in Tandivada grant of Pṛthivī Mahārāja.<sup>9</sup> Further in two inscriptions of Pulakeśin, the Cālukya Emperor, the name occurs in one way or other.<sup>10</sup> Aihole inscription of Pulakeśin describes Piṣṭapura as a fortress. It is clear that Piṣṭapura, which is identical with Pithapuram, the chief town of a taluq in the East Godavari cows and a village in donation.<sup>1</sup> Poksara is certainly the Puṣkara Urtha, a celebrated place of pilgrimage of the Hindus. It is now called Pokhara and is seven miles north of Ajmer in Rajasthan. There are five principal temples at this place, dedicated to Brahmā, Sāvitrī, Badarīnārāyaṇa, Varāha and Śiva. The town is picturesquely situated on the lake with hills on three sides.<sup>2</sup> The Bṛhat-saṁhitā mentions it.<sup>3</sup>

Pokhara occurs in five Sanchi stūpa inscriptions also.<sup>4</sup>

POṢA PURA

The scions of Poṣa-puta are mentioned in Ara inscription<sup>5</sup> of the year 41. The city is identical with modern Peshawar, now in Pakistan. At a distance of seventeen miles north-east of Peshawar lies the ancient ruins of Puṣkalāvati, the ancient capital of Gandhāra country and which is represented now by a huge mound of great height at Charsadda. Hiuen-tsang in his accounts of travel refers to both the places, that is Peshawar and Puṣkalāvati.<sup>6</sup>

PRABHĀSA

See s. v. Pabhāsa.

PRASANNAPURA

Prasanna-pura is described as a city decorated with the series of gardens and forests in Mallar Plates of Vyāghrarāja.<sup>7</sup> The city was situated on the banks of the river Nidilā. The river and the city mentioned above have not been identified so far. It is certain, however, that the city stood in the neighbourhood of modern Sirpur. It appears to have been named after the king Prasanna or Prasanna-mātrā of Śarabha-pura.

three Sanchi Stūpa inscriptions.<sup>1</sup> Poona Plates<sup>2</sup> of Prabhāvati-guptā also mention the city called Pratiṣṭhāna. The ancient site of Pratiṣṭhāna is represented by Paithon on the northern bank of the river Godavari, in the Aurangabad district of Maharashtra. The city might be associated with Petenikas of the Aśokan inscriptions, who are identified with Paiṣṇikas or the inhabitants of Paiṣṇa on the Godāvarī. According to the author of Periplus, the city Paethana was situated at a distance of twenty days journey to the south of Barygaza, identified with Broach. From Paithon great quantity of Onyx-stones were imported to Barygaza. According to Ptolemy, it (Baithana) was the capital of Sirotelemaious representing the Sanskrit Śrī-Pulomāvi of the Naṣik cave inscriptions.

According to the Jaina tradition, Śātavāhana defeated Vikramāditya of Ujjayini and made himself the king of Pratiṣṭhāna-pura.<sup>3</sup>

PRAVARAPURA

The place is referred to in the following inscriptions<sup>4</sup> of the Vākāṭaka dynasty :

1. Chammak grant of Pravarasena II.
2. Pattan Plate of Pravarasena II.
3. Dudia Plates of Pravarasena II.

Rai Bahadur K. N. Dikshit, first of all, suggested in a note added to Mr. T. A. Wellsted's article<sup>5</sup> that Pravara-pura may be identical with Pawnar, situated at a distance of six miles from Wardha on Nagpur-Wardha road, on the right bank of the Dhama river. Later, Dr. Mirashi supported the view on the basis of the numerous finds of the sculptures of the Gupta age from the village Pawnar, which has a strong old fort surrounded on three sides by the river Dhama, which serves as a moat.<sup>6</sup> The name of the city indicates that it was founded by Pravarasena II. It appears that king Pravarasena II shifted his capital from Nandivardhana to the newly built town after ruling atleast for eleven years from Nandivardhana. It has been suggested that Pravara-pura had its ano-

PRAYĀGA

Some of the inscriptions discovered at Bhita near Prayāga (Allahabad) mention the following kings, who were associated with Prayāga :

- (1) Mahārāja Gautamiputra Śrīśivamegha.
- (2) Rājan Vāsiṣṭhiputra Bhīmasena of 2nd or 3rd century A.D.
- (3) Mahārāja Gautamiputra Vṛṣadhvaṇa of the 3rd or 4th century A.D.<sup>1</sup>

The Aphsad stone inscription<sup>2</sup> of Ādityasena tells us that Kumāragupta,<sup>3</sup> who won victory over the Maukhari king Išānavarman, performed religious suicide at Prayāga. Prayāga finds mention in Rithpur Plates of Bhavattavarman also.<sup>4</sup>

In the Rāmāyaṇa,<sup>5</sup> Mahābhārata,<sup>6</sup> Sauryapurāṇa<sup>7</sup> and in the Raghuvamśa,<sup>8</sup> the saṅgama of the Gaṅgā and the Yamunā and sometimes with Sarasvatī is mentioned at this holy city of Prayāga. Hiuen-tsang refers to the practice of sacrificing one's life before a Brahmanical temple situated in the middle of the city, due north of the pillar of Aśoka and Samudragupta.<sup>9</sup> Harṣa's assemblies at Prayāga, every five years, speak of the religious sanctity of the place and the benevolent attitude of the emperor.

PRṢṬHA-PURA

It occurs in Bombay Asiatic Society grant<sup>10</sup> of Dharasena II. The place is unidentifiable.

or fourth century B.C. makes the earliest epigraphic reference to Puṇḍanagala, i.e., the city of Puṇḍranagara or Puṇḍravardhana. The inscription refers to the distribution of paddy from the royal granary, under the supervision of the Māhamātra of Puṇḍranagara as a remedial measure to alleviate the distress of a famine. The distinct mention of Puṇḍranagara in this inscription confirms its identification with Mahasthan-garh, seven miles north of Bogra, in the Bogra district.<sup>1</sup>

Puṇḍravardhana is mentioned as one of the seats of the Jain Pontiffs in Paharpur grant<sup>2</sup> of 478 A.D. Kalakuri copper-plate inscription<sup>3</sup> of 438-9 A.D. refers to some inhabitant of this city while in Sultanpur copper-plate inscription<sup>4</sup> of 438-9 A.D., the city itself has been mentioned. The city of Puṇḍravardhana was the headquarters of the country known as Puṇḍravardhana-bhukti, which finds mention in five copper-plate inscriptions<sup>5</sup> of 5th-6th century A.D., discovered at Damodarpur.

One of the Sanchi Stūpa inscriptions<sup>6</sup> records the name of the city as Puṇḍavaḍhana.

A burnt clay figure of a female deity belonging to the Śuṅga period and found at Mahasthangarh<sup>7</sup> helps us to confirm the fact that Mahasthan represents one of the earliest city-sites of Bengal. It has been suggested that the Maroundae of Ptolemy<sup>8</sup> were the Puṇḍras, who had their headquarters at the city of Puṇḍravardhana.<sup>9</sup> For other details see Puṇḍravardhana-bhukti. Chapter II (p. 24).

PURĪ

Aihole inscription of Pulakeśin II (634 A.D.) informs us that Pulakeśin, the Cālukya king besieged Purī, the fortune of the Western sea.<sup>10</sup> The exact identity of Purī is uncertain. It was the chief town of the Northern Koṅkana from the time of early Cālukyas.

In the light of the Alberuni's statement about the capital of Koṅkaṇa, it has been suggested that the ancient site of Purī should be looked for at or near modern Thana, the chief town of the district of the same name in Maharashtra.<sup>1</sup>

PUṢKARAṆA

The Susunia Rock Inscription of Candravarman refers to Puṣkaraṇa<sup>2</sup>, which is modern Pokhrana,<sup>3</sup> on the Damodar river in the Bankura district, about twenty-five miles east of the Susunia hill, which was the seat of administration of the Candravarman. It may be mentioned here that Late Mahamahopādhyāya Haraprasāda Śāstrī had previously suggested that Puṣkaraṇa is identical with Pokharan in Jodhpur district,<sup>4</sup> but later evidences, particularly those concerned with the site of the village Pokharana (Bankura district), which abounds in mounds formed by the ruined heaps of older habitation, seem to have finally settled the question of its identification.

PUṢKARĪ

The city of Puṣkarī occurs in the following two inscriptions<sup>5</sup> of the sixth century A.D. :

1. Podagarh inscription of Bhavadatta.
2. Kesarihada Plates of Arthapati Bhaṭṭāraka.

The place has been identified with Podagarh in Koraput district of Orissa.<sup>6</sup>

Puṣkarī was the chief centre of the kings of the Nala dynasty. Vāyu and Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa say that the descendants of Nala would rule in Kosala. This Kosala must be the country to the north-west of Kolab upto the valley of Tel river. Podagarh is situated in this above mentioned tract. As suggested by G. Ramdas, Puṣkarī may be identified with Vidura, the capital of Niṣadha or Kosala, according to the Purāṇas.<sup>7</sup>

RĀJAGAHA

Hathīgumpha Inscription<sup>1</sup> of Khāravēla mentions the city, Rājagaha, modern Rajgir, about fourteen miles south-west of the town of Bihar Sharif in the Bihar sub-division of Patna district. It is a little over forty miles, as the crow flies south-east of Patna and about six miles south of ancient site of Nalanda. The antiquity of Rājagaha is borne out by literature and corroborated by the archaeological sources. Pali & Prakrit literature speaks of its power, prosperity and magnificence in the life-time of Buddha and Mahāvira.<sup>2</sup> They also inform us that Magadha had a long rivalry with Aṅga and Vaiśālī and consequently her capital Rājagaha had been formerly subjugated by the Aṅgas.<sup>3</sup> Out of various names, Vasumatī,<sup>4</sup> Magadhapura, Bārhadrathapura<sup>5</sup> and Rājagaha etc., Gīrivraja<sup>6</sup> seems to be the earliest name of Rajgir, keeping in view the site of the old city encircled by five hills, which are now crowded with Jain temples, built of old material.<sup>7</sup> The Buddhist tradition claims that Aśoka erected a stūpa and a pillar with elephant capital, but in none of the excavations so far, undertaken, any distinctive Mauryan ruins have been discovered.<sup>8</sup> In the beginning of the fifth century, Fa-Hien found the valley of Rajgir quite desolate and even two centuries later when Hiuen-tsang visited it, the conditions were not much different. Majumdar, on the basis of Hiuen-tsang, thinks that the old city had two separate divisions, the Palace city, and the Mountain city.<sup>9</sup> For detailed accounts of Son-bhandara cave and Vaibhara Hill vide the article of Śānti Mukhopādhyāya (IHQ, XXXVII, 105) and for other details, see The Antiquarian Remains in Bihar, D. R. Patil, 432 ff.

the temple Pādamūla of Rāmacandra, who is mentioned as Rāmagiri-svāmi, i.e., the Lord of Rāmagiri. The Poona grant<sup>1</sup> of Prabhāvatiguptā is said to have been offered first to this temple of Lord (of Rāmagiri) and then to the particular Ācāryas. It seems that the footprints of Rāmacandra established in the temple dedicated to Him were in worship in Rāmagiri in the fifth century A.D. Meghadūta describes the Āśrama on the Rāmagiri being sanctified by the ablutions of Sītā.<sup>2</sup> The place was surrounded by the shady trees, extensive and dense jungle and reddish stones. Wilson<sup>3</sup> identified Rāmagiri with Ramtek, a taluq town of Nagpur district, forty-two kilometres north of Nagpur, three miles from Nandardhan, the capital of the Vākātakas. Mr. K.B. Pathak, however, suggested that Rāmagiri should be identified with Ramgarh hills in Suguja district, Madhya Pradesh,<sup>4</sup> owing to its extreme proximity to Āmrakūṣa or Amarakaṇṭaka as specified in the Meghadūta. Recently Mr. Venkataramayya has attempted to support the view of Mr. Pathak on the evidence of the available details of the site of above mentioned caves.<sup>5</sup> Dr. Mirashi, however, is the staunch supporter of the view sponsored by Mr. Wilson. Taking literary, epigraphical and monumental sources together, he concludes that Ramtek has better claims than any other site to be the representative of ancient Rāmagiri.<sup>6</sup> We can summarise his views as follow : 'that the footprints of Rāmacandra still continue to be in worship at Ramtek. There is still a small pool of water where Sītā is said to have used to take her bath. The surroundings of Ramtek are in close conformity to those mentioned in the Meghadūta. Seoni-Chhapra Plateau and Amarwada, the representatives of the Māla country and Āmrakūṣa hill, are situated in exactness to the distance, direction and description in comparison to Ramtek. Moreover, the name Rāmagiri occurs in a stone inscription<sup>7</sup> of Rāmacandra Yādava of the 13th century A.D. discovered at Ramtek.' As regards the sculptures at Ramgarh hills, Dr. Mirashi is of the view that the so-called images of Rāma and Sītā are in actual those of Balarāma and

RAUHĪTAKA

The name occurs in the Prasasti of Lākhā Maṇḍal at Madha.<sup>1</sup> It may be gathered from Rājatarāṅgiṇī<sup>2</sup> that Rauhitaka is the name of a town and a district in Northern India. It probably corresponds, as Dr. Buhler<sup>3</sup> suggested, to the modern town of Rohtak, the headquarters of a district in Haryana State, forty-three miles north-east of Delhi.

ŚAILAPURA

The city is noticed in two Belora inscriptions<sup>4</sup> of Pravarasena II. It has been identified with Salbardi situated in the midst of hills about fifteen miles east of Ladki. It is an ancient place containing old caves and hot springs.

SAJAYATA

Sajayata, i.e., Sañjayanti is mentioned in Banavāsi inscription<sup>5</sup> of Viṇhukaḍa Śātakaṇṇi. The place is located at Banavāsi, also known as Jayanti and Vaijayanti. Professor Hema Chandra Raychaudhuri, however, suggests that Sanjan in Thana district is modern representative of Sañjayanti.<sup>6</sup>

SAMĀPĀ

The city of Samāpā is mentioned in two separate Rock edicts<sup>7</sup> of Aśoka, discovered from Jaugada, Ganjam district, Orrisa, in the vicinity of which the ancient city is said to have been located. In Mauryan times, South-Western Kāliṅga had its headquarters at this place. The Jaugada inscription is addressed to the district officers and city magistrate of Samāpā.

been identified with Shahpur near Junagadh.

SAMJAYAPURA

Nagarjunikanda inscription<sup>1</sup> of the time of Vasuṣeṇa records the name of the city called Samjaya-pura. The place is located at Salour, a mart, placed by Ptolemy<sup>2</sup> in the Land of Pandion (Pāṇḍya).

SAṄGAMAPURA

It finds mention in Keregalur Plates of Mādhava II. It was situated in Sendraka-viṣaya.<sup>3</sup> The name denotes that it was a town at the confluence. It may be identified either with Kudli at the confluence of the Tuṅga and the Bhadrā rivers in Shimoga district, or with Kudlur, where the Honnuhole receives a tributary in Chamarajanagar taluq, or with Harihar, where the Tuṅgabhadra receives Haridrāvati.

ŚĀNTANAPURA

The place occurs in Varansi Plates<sup>4</sup> of Harirāja of the 5th or 6th century A.D. As suggested by Rao Bahadur K. N. Dikshit, it may be identical with Satna, the headquarters of Satna district in Madhya Pradesh.<sup>5</sup>

ŚARABHAPURA

The following inscriptions<sup>6</sup> record the name of the city called Śarabha-pura :

1. Arang Plate of Jayarāja.

The exact identity of Śarabha-pura is uncertain. Mr. L. P. Pandeya, previously, identified Śarabha-pura with the village Sarappur or Sarapgarh, the headquarters of a Zamindari tract by that name in the Gangpur Feudatory State,<sup>1</sup> but later on he himself left this claim on account of the scarcity of evidences in support of Sarappur being an ancient town. He suggested a new identification of Śarabha-pura with Sarabha or Sarwa near the town of Sheorinarayn in the Bilaspur district, Madhya Pradesh.<sup>2</sup> Dr. Stenkonow held that Śarabha-pura is identical with Sarabhavaram in the Chodavaram division, ten miles east from the bank of the Godavari and twenty miles from Rajahmundry.<sup>3</sup> Late Dr. R. L. Mitter was in favour of taking Sambalpur as the representative town of ancient Śarabhapura.<sup>4</sup> Mr. Hira Lal, however, suggested that Śarabha-pura was the other name of Śrī-pura imposed by the victor in honour of his memory.<sup>5</sup>

SELA-PURA

It may be identical with Sailapura of Belora inscriptions of Pravarasena II mentioned above (p. 103). Sela-pura occurs in one of the Bharhut inscriptions.<sup>6</sup>

SERIYA-PURA

This name also occurs in one of the Bharhut inscriptions.<sup>7</sup> It seems that Seriya-pura was an important port on the western coast of India. The Serivanija-Jātaka<sup>8</sup> mentions a kingdom by the name of Seri.

ŚIBIPURA or ŚIVIPURA

Śibi-pura or Śivi-pura, the ancient capital of the Śibis is mentioned in the Shorkot inscription.<sup>9</sup> It may be safely inferred that the mound of Shorkot in Jhang district (now in Pakistan) makes north-west of Saheth-Maheth,<sup>2</sup> but by the discovery of the inscription<sup>3</sup> of Govindacandra of 1128 A.D., the identity of Śrāvastī with Saheth-Maheth has been made quite certain.

According to Buddhaghosa, Sāvattī was so called because here the sage Sāvattī lived. According to Papañcasūdanī,<sup>4</sup> however, the city was so called as it contained everything required by human being. But according to the Viṣṇu-purāṇa<sup>5</sup> version, it was founded by a king of the solar race after his name. Śrāvastī, the Candrikāpurī of the Jains, was sacred to them, being the birth-place of the third tīrthāṅkara Candraprabhānātha.<sup>6</sup> Harṣacarita (Chapter V) mentions Śrutavarmā, the ruler of Śrāvastī. Fa-hien<sup>7</sup> and Hiuen-tsang<sup>8</sup> have also noticed this place in the fifth and the seventh centuries A.D.

ŚREṆYAKA

Salri inscription<sup>9</sup> of Candēśvara-Hastin records this name. The place has been located at Salri, the remnant of the city Bhaṭṭasālīpurī.

ŚRĪPURA

The following inscriptions of Śarabhapurīya dynasty as well as of the dynasty of Pāṇḍuvarmās had been issued from Śrīpura:

1. Kauvatala Plates<sup>10</sup> of Sudevarāja.
2. Thakurdiya Plates<sup>11</sup> of Pravaraarāja.
3. Mallar Plates<sup>12</sup> of Pravaraarāja.
4. Rajim copper-plate inscription<sup>13</sup> of Tivaradeva.

Śrīpura is identical with modern Sirpur in Raipur district of Madhya Pradesh, about forty miles east by north from Raipur.<sup>1</sup>

Another Śrīpura is mentioned in Koroshanda grant<sup>2</sup> of Viśākha-varman, the ruler of Kaliṅga. It may be identical with Siripuram in Viśākha-patnam district, three miles south of the Nāgavālī river.<sup>3</sup> The Bhūmikhaṇḍa of the Padma-purāṇa mentions the city as situated in Kaliṅga. The question of its connection with Sirpur about forty miles east by north from Raipur must await further discoveries for a solution.

ŚRĪ-VAROHAMĀNAKOṬĪ

The city of Śrīvardhamānaakoṭī is recorded in Banskbera Plate<sup>4</sup> of Harṣa. It was situated possibly in Aṅgadiya-viṣaya. The place has not been identified so far.

STHĀNA-KUNḌŪRA

On the Talagunda pillar inscription<sup>5</sup> of Kākusthavarmaṇ is engraved the name of the city called Sthāna-kunḍūra. In Talagunda temple inscription<sup>6</sup> of Ravivarman's mother Prabhāvatī, Sthāna-kuṇḍajapura-ūrtha is mentioned. The latter is most probably identical with the former, which again is identical with modern Talagunda in Shikarpur taluq of the Shimoga district, Mysore State.

ŚŪRPĀRAKA, SOPĀRAKA

The famous city of Śūrpāraka is called Sopāraka in two Karle and one Nanaghat inscriptions,<sup>7</sup> Sopāraka in two Kanheri inscriptions,<sup>8</sup> and Śōrpāraka in Nasik cave inscription<sup>9</sup> of Uṣavadāta. On the evidence of Sopara Rock edict, the antiquity of Śūrpāraka can be traced to the third century B.C. Śūrpāraka is identical with Sopara, in the Thana district, about forty miles north-west of Bassein and thirty-seven miles north of Bombay.<sup>10</sup> The old land-

Moreover, Besnagar Garuḍa Pillar inscription of Heliodoros mentions the Greek Ambassador as the inhabitant of Takḥkhasilā, i.e., Takṣaśilā.<sup>3</sup> The city of Takṣaśilā is identical with Taxila, now in West Pakistan, twenty-two miles north-west of Rawalpindi. The remains of Takṣaśilā lie immediately to the east and north-east of the Saraikala Railway junction in the valley of their Haro. These remains having three successive, but ancient sites, Bhir mound, Sirkap and Sirsukh, represent the ancient, Greek and Kushāṇa phases of political history of this city. Cunningham says that the site of Taxila is found near Shah-Dheri, just a mile to the north-east of Kala-ka-Sarai in the extensive ruins of a fortified city around which atleast fifty-five stūpas, twenty-eight monasteries and nine temples were found.

The city of Takṣaśilā figures prominently in the story regarding the recitation of the Mahābhārata. It was at this city that Janamejaya heard from Vaiśampāyana the famous story of the Mahābhārata.<sup>4</sup> We find remarkable coincidence between the strī-parva of the Mahābhārata and the second part of the Besnagar inscription.<sup>5</sup> It seems that Heliodoros of Taxila actually heard and utilised the teaching of the great Epic.

The city of Takṣaśilā was the capital of the Gandhāra country.

TALĀPURA

Talā-pura or Tālā-pura is mentioned in Nirmand grant<sup>6</sup> of Samudraśena. It was situated in the vicinity of Nirmand in Kullu district of Himachal Pradesh.

TOSALI

First two separate rock-edicts found at Dhauli are addressed to the Mahāmātras at Tosali.<sup>7</sup> The place Tosali is also mentioned in the Nagarjunakond inscription of Virapurisadata.<sup>8</sup> It pre-

TRI-PARVATA

Devagiri grant<sup>4</sup> of Devavarman records the name of the city called Triparvata. The city has been identified with Devagiri or with Trigiri or Tegur in the Dharwar district. Some of the scholars equate it with Murgod in the Belgaum district in Mysore State.<sup>5</sup>

TRIVARA-NAGARA

The following grants refer to this city :

1. Ipur Plates<sup>6</sup> of Mādhavavarman.
2. Polamuru Plates<sup>7</sup> of Mādhavavarman.

Trivara-nagara appears to mean, the city of king Trivara. A king named Trivara has been mentioned in the Konedda grant<sup>8</sup> of Śailodbhava king Dharmarāja. A king named Tivara is found in the line of the Pāṇḍvas of Kosala, who had their capital at Śrīpura.<sup>9</sup> It is possible that king Trivara or Tivara mentioned above had founded the city called Trivara-nagara. Grants of Mādhavavarman mention the young women living in the several excellent palaces of Trivaranagara.

TUMBA-VANA

Six votive inscriptions<sup>10</sup> on Sanchi Stūpa commemorate the donations made by the inhabitants of Tumba-vana. Tumain inscription<sup>11</sup> of 435 A.D. mentions the building of a shining temple at Tumbavana. The ancient site of Tumain and some of its monumental and sculptural antiquities can be traced to fourth-fifth centuries A.D.<sup>1</sup> Tumba-vana finds mention in the Bṛhatsaṁhitā<sup>2</sup> of Varāha-mihira. According to the statement of Buddhaghoṣa, Tumba-vana would be the step between Viḍiṣhā and Kauśāmbī on the route from Gonarda towards the Yamunā.<sup>3</sup> Purāṇas mention the people Turaminas and the Tumburas, which may represent the inhabitants of Tumba-vana.<sup>4</sup>

UCCAŚṚṄĠ

Halsi grant<sup>5</sup> of Harivarman refers to the above mentioned city. Uccaśṛṅgi has been identified with Uchchangidurga situated about three miles to the east of Molkalmuri in the Dodderi taluq of the Chitaldrug district, Mysore State.<sup>6</sup> Uccaśṛṅgi is called Ucchrṅgi in Shimoga Plates<sup>7</sup> of Māndhātārāja and in Dumaya Plates<sup>8</sup> of Ravimahārāja. It was the capital of the Nolambavādī—thirty-two thousand province under the Pāṇḍyas and probably under the Pallavas before them.

UCCE-NAGARA

Ucce-nagara is mentioned in a Mathura Jain inscription.<sup>9</sup> It has been identified with Bulandshahr near the Kālī-nadī in the alluvial plain, i.e., Doab between the Gaṅgā and Yumunā in the Meerut division.<sup>10</sup> The town was famous by the name of Baraṇa or Barana also.

UJENI, UJJAYINI

First separate Rock edict (Dhauli version)<sup>11</sup> of Aśoka refers to the city called Ujeni. A royal prince was deputed here as his Viceroy by king Aśoka. Nasik cave inscription of Uṣavadāta refers to the city of Ujeni as one of the different places where one hundred thousand Brahmanas dine by the charities of Uṣavadāta.<sup>1</sup> Thirty-two votive inscriptions<sup>2</sup> on Sanchi stūpa refer to the donors, who hail from Ujeni. One Nagarjunakond Āyaka pillar inscription<sup>3</sup> mentions some inhabitants of Ujeni. Abhona Plates<sup>4</sup> of Śaṅkara-gaṇa of 595 A.D. and Virḍi Plates<sup>5</sup> of Kharagraha I of 616 A.D. mention the victorious town by the name of Ujjayinī. Śravaṇa-Belgola epitaph<sup>6</sup> of the seventh century A.D. describes the city with the names Ujjayinī and Viśālā both. It says that Bhadrabāhu II (B.C. 53) announced at Ujjain a period of difficulty lasting for twelve years. The city described as Ujeni or Ujjayinī in the inscriptions is modern Ujjain, the district headquarters in Madhya Pradesh. It was situated on the river Śiprā.

Ujjayinī was the scene of activity of Kālidāsa, whose dramas were performed here on the occasion of the spring festival at the royal court. The Dīpanṣā ascribes its foundation to Accuta-gāmi. The importance of the city of Ujjayinī as a commercial link with the ports on western coasts is noted by the author of Periplus, and Ptolemy associates it with Caṣṭana.<sup>7</sup>

UKHASIRI-VAḢHAMĀNA

The place is mentioned in three Ghantasala inscriptions.<sup>8</sup> It seems to be identical with Ghantasala. Ptolemy mentions Bardamana among the inland towns of the Maisoloi. The position assigned by Ptolemy to Bardamana is 136° 15' E, 15° 15' N. This renders it difficult to identify his Bardamana with Ukhasiri-vaḣhamāna. Another alternative would be to connect Ukhasiri-vaḣhamāna with Kantasala and to explain it as a territorial division, in which the emporium was situated.<sup>9</sup>

URVARAPURA

The name is inscribed in Mathura Lion capital.<sup>10</sup> The place is unidentifiable.

VALABHĪ

Valabhī is mentioned in the forty-six inscriptions<sup>1</sup> of the Maitraka dynasty dating from 502 A.D. to 645 A.D. It is identical with Vala or Valabhipur, the taluq headquarters in the Bhavanagar district in Gujarat State. This small town is situated on the Bhavanagar-Ahmedabad road at a distance of forty kilometres north-west of Bhavanagar. It can be approached from the Dhola junction of the Western Railway, from where it lies at a distance of about ten kilometres. The area around the town of Valabhipur formed a small high plateau and it was situated between two arms of the river Ghelo. The area looked like valabhī, i.e., roof, and thus, this is an example of a situation where geographical phenomena seems to have been the cause of giving the name to the area concerned.<sup>2</sup>

VALKHA

The city of Valkha is mentioned in Indore Plate of Svāmīdāsa, as well as in the Indore Plate of Bhulūṇḍa and in Sirpur Plate of Rudradāsa.<sup>3</sup> As suggested by R.B.K.N. Dikshit, it may be identical with Bahal in the Chalisgaon taluq in East Khandesh district, Maharashtra State.<sup>4</sup> According to Dr. Mirashi, however, Valkha is same as Vaghli, about six miles north-east of Chalisgaon in East Khandesh district, on the Bombay-Bhusaval line.<sup>5</sup> Vaghli is an old place containing three ancient temples and some old Sanskrit inscriptions.<sup>6</sup> One of these inscriptions describes Vaghli as the capital of a feudatory royal family which originally hailed from Valabhī.<sup>7</sup>

VANAVĀSĪ or VANAVĀSA

The following inscriptions<sup>8</sup> describe the city called Vanavāsa or Vanavāsī :

1. Nagarjunakond inscription of Virapurisadāta.
2. Nagarjunakond inscription of Ābhīra Vasuseṇa.

3. Hyderabad grant of Pulakeśin II.
4. Aihole inscription of Pulakeśin II.<sup>4</sup>

The city of Vanavāsī is known as Vejayantī, in one of the Karle inscriptions and in Nasik cave inscription of Lord of Venākaśaka, Gotamiputa Siri Sadakaṇi.<sup>1</sup> The Nasik grant is issued from the military camp of Vejayantī. Aihole inscription describes Vanavāsī as a place, which has for a girdle the rows of singing harisars that play on the light waves of the Varadā river. The city by her wealth rivalled the city of the gods. Vanavāsī is identical with Vanavasi in Shimoga district of Mysore State.

Ptolemy draws a distinction between Byzantium, a market town on the coast and Bandouasoi, an island city.<sup>2</sup> It is possible that foreigners did not always understand the distinction between Vaijayantī-Banavāsī in the interior on the banks of the river Varadā, and its fort which may have laid somewhere on the west coast and bore the same name.

VAṬA

The following inscriptions<sup>3</sup> refer to the city called Vaṭa :

- (1) Vasantgarh inscription of Varmalāta of 625 A.D.
- (2) Samoli inscription of the time of Śīlāditya, 646 A.D.

The city is identical with Vasantgarh in Sirohi district, Rajasthan, six miles from Samoli. It was the capital of a feudatory of king Varmalāta. Kṣemārya temple mentioned in Vasantgarh inscription is the same as the temple of Khamela-mātā at Vasantgarh.

VAṬA-NAGARA

It occurs in Vadner Plates<sup>4</sup> of Buddha-rāja of 609 A.D. It has been identified with Vadner in the Chandvad taluq of the Nasik district.<sup>5</sup> Vadner Plates also mention the sub-division of Vaṭa-nagara.<sup>6</sup> Vani-Dindori Plates of Govinda III mention Vaṭa-nagara-viśaya.<sup>7</sup> In this way, Vaṭanagara was the chief town of the bhoga and the viśaya named after it.

VĀTĀPI

The following inscriptions record the name of the city of Vātāpi :

1. Badami inscription<sup>1</sup> of 543 A.D.
2. Badami Boulder inscription.<sup>2</sup>
3. Badami stone inscription.<sup>3</sup>
4. Aihole inscription<sup>4</sup> of Pulakeśin II, 634 A.D.
5. Hyderahad grant<sup>5</sup> of Pulakeśin II.
6. Nerur grant<sup>6</sup> of Pulakeśin II.
7. Chiplun Plates<sup>7</sup> of Pulakeśin II.

The city of Vātāpi is represented by modern Badami, sixty-five miles south of Bijapur, in Mysore State. It lay picturesquely at the mouth of a ravine between two rocky hills on its north and south. About three miles from the city flowed the Malaprabhā, which falls into Krishna at Kapilā-Saṅgama.

Vātāpi is the first city, which may claim the distinction of being the capital of a great empire after the passing away of the Śātavāhanas. Badami inscription of 543 A.D. records the making of the best hill of Vātāpi into an unconquerable fortress. In Aihole inscription, it is represented as a newly married woman. In Chiplun Plates, Kirtivarman I is described as the first maker of Vātāpi.

VAṬA-PŪRAKA

Seoni grant<sup>8</sup> of Pravarasena II mentions the town of Vaṭa-pūraaka. The town was situated in the sub-division (bhoga) of Rennākārpāra. It has been located at Vadgaon, near Bamhani, situated within twenty to thirty miles from the right bank of the Waingāṅgā.

VATSAGULMA

The Bashim grant of Vindhyaśakti II as well as India Office Plate of Devasena mention the city Vatsagulma or Vatsyagulma.<sup>9</sup>

It is probably identical with Bashim, the chief town of the Washin taluq of the Akola district in Maharashtra.<sup>1</sup> Bashim lies on the Khandwa-Purna section of the central railway. It is one hundred six kilometres from Akola and situated between Ajanta Range and the river Pengaṅgā. It is regarded as a holy place. As many as one hundred eight Tīrthas associated with different Gods and sages are said to be there at this place.<sup>2</sup>

Sarvasena chose Vatsagulma as capital of his separate Vākātaka kingdom. He wrote alongwith other gāthās the Prakrit Kāvya, Harī-rijaya. From his time onwards down to the period of Rāja-Śekhara, Prakrit poetry of high standard continued to be produced in the city of Vatsagulma. This kind of practice gave birth to a particular style which is named as Vacchomī by Rājaśekhara in the opening verse of his Prakrit Play Karpūra-Maṅjarī.<sup>3</sup> The Kāmasūtra of Vātsyāyana mentions Vatsagulmakas, the people of Vatsagulma.<sup>4</sup> The Jayamaṅgalā commentary on the Kāmasūtra gives some information about the derivation of Vatsagulma, the name of a country. According to this commentary, the country was known as Vatsagulma, because the two princes of Dakṣiṇāpatha, Vatsa and Gulma, had settled it.<sup>5</sup> In the local Māhātmya, however, it is stated that a sage Vatsa by his severe austerities made an assemblage (gulma) of the gods come down and settle in the vicinity of his place of residence, which since then came to be known as Vatsagulma. The importance of Vatsagulma as a centre of culture is suggested by Rājaśekhara. In his rhetorical work Kāvya-mīmāṃsā (third chapter), the mythical Kāvya-purṣa is said to have married the sāhitya-vidyādhari at Vatsagulma in Vidarbha, which is the pleasure-resort of the God of Love.

VEDISA or VIDIŚĀ

The modern city Vidisha is mentioned by the name Vedisa in several Sanchi Stūpa inscriptions and Bharhut inscriptions.<sup>6</sup> Vadner Plates of Buddharāja (608 A.D.) use the term Vaidīśa-vāsaka for Vidiśā.<sup>7</sup> According to the Purāṇas, Vaidīśa was situated on the bank of river Vidiṣā, emerging from the Pāripātra mountain.<sup>1</sup> The name Vidiṣā or Vaidiṣa is connected with the river Vidiṣā, which is identical with modern Bes. The old city is now represented with Besnagar, situated in the fork of the Bes and the Betwa (Vetravatī), within two miles of Vidisha, the district headquarters in the Madhya Pradesh. It lies at a distance of twenty-six miles north-east of Bhopal.

Vidiṣā is mentioned in the Rāmāyana,<sup>2</sup> Mahābhārata<sup>3</sup> and the Purāṇas.<sup>4</sup> According to the Mahābhārata, the city was the capital of the Daśārṇa country, which is represented by East Malwa and Bhopal. According to the Mahāvamśa,<sup>5</sup> it lay at a distance of fifty yojanas from Pātaliputra. As described in the Rāmāyana,<sup>6</sup> this city was given to Śatrughna by Rāmachandra. Kālidāsa mentions the city of Vidiṣā in his three famous works, the Meghadūta,<sup>7</sup> Mālavikāgnimitra<sup>8</sup> and Raghuvamśa.<sup>9</sup> While describing the route of the cloud messenger in his work Meghadūta, Kālidāsa notices the country of Daśārṇa, in which direction lay the well-known capital city of Vidiṣā on the Vetravatī. The Mālavikāgnimitra refers to the love of Agnimitra, king of Vidiṣā and a Viceroy of his father Puṣyamitra, for Mālavikā, a princess of Vidarbha, living at his courts in disguise. According to the Raghuvamśa, Subāhu, a son of Śatrughna was put in charge of Vidiṣā. A Sanchi record refers to the carving done by the Vidiṣā workers in ivory known as Dantakaras. Many other inscriptions record donations of pious men and women, devotees, monks and nuns, and thus shed light to the religious character of the people of this place. Donors from this place contributed also towards the setting up of the Buddhist edifices.

Vidiṣā was also a centre of Vaiṣṇavism. The famous Besnagar Column record narrates its erection, surmounted by Garuḍa, in honour of Kṛṣṇa-Vāsudeva by the Greek Ambassador.

VENĠĠ

The victorious city of Veṅgīpura is described in the following inscriptions<sup>1</sup> dating between 320 A.D. and 450 A.D. :

1. Ellore Plates of Devavarman.
2. Kanteru grant of Nandivarman I.
3. Kanukollu Plates of Nandivarman I.
4. Kollair Plate of Nandivarman II.
5. Peddavegi grant of Nandivarman II.
6. Kanteru grant of Skandavarman.
7. Dharikatur grant of Acaṇḍavarman.

An examination of the ruins of Veṅgī, which are found at and near Pedda-Vegi, a village seven miles north of Ellora, West Godavari district and about nine miles to the north-west of the Kolleru lake bring to our minds what an extensive and powerful city it must have been in its palmy days. At present, we see near its ruins two hamlets Pedavegi and Chinavegi. Five miles to the south-east, lies the village of Dendalōru, ancient Lendalōra with its hamlets of Ganganagudem and Senagudem closely.<sup>2</sup> In ancient times, all these villages might have comprised the rich and powerful city of Vengipura.

Vengipura possibly represents the Benagouron of Ptolemy, the seat of the Salakenoi or Śālaṅkāyanas. If this identification be accepted, the antiquity of the city may be carried back to the second century A.D.

VIJAYAPALLI-VĀṬAKA

The place is mentioned in the Pandhurna grant<sup>3</sup> of Pravarasena II. It has been identified with Bijagor, on the left bank of the river Kanhan, four miles in the north from Multai, Chhindwara road, in Madhya Pradesh.

VIJAYAPURA

Vijaya-pura or Vijaya-purī is the name of a town mentioned in the following inscriptions :

1. EI, IX, p. 59, JAHRS, V, p. 31 ; EI, XXXI, p. 4 ; IA, V, 175 ; JAHRS, I, p. 92 ; EI, XXV, p. 46 ; ibid, XXXVI, p. 5.
2. IA, XX, p. 93.
3. Vāṭaka Rājavamsa, p. 209.

6. Andhavaram Plates<sup>6</sup> of Anantaśaktivarman.
7. Kheda grant<sup>7</sup> of Cālukya Vijayarāja, year 394.

According to the Nāgārjunakoṇḍa inscriptions, Vijayapura was situated at Śrīparvata. As suggested by Professor H. C. Raychaudhuri,<sup>8</sup> it may be identical with the famous city of Bezvada in Andhra Pradesh.

VINDHYAPURĪ

Mallasarūḥ grant<sup>9</sup> of Vijayasena refers to this town. The place is unidentifiable.

VĪRAPURA

One of the Amaravati sculpture inscription<sup>10</sup> records Vira-pura as the name of a city of Andhra Pradesh. The place is unidentifiable.

YAŚAPURA

Yaśapura-mārga, i.e., the road leading to Yaśa-pura, occurs in Patna Museum Plate<sup>11</sup> of Pravarasena II. The town Yaśa-pura should be traced in the Balaghat district, Madhya Pradesh.

CHAPTER III THE VILLAGES

The villages, generally, are called grāma in Sanskrit inscriptions. Prakrit inscriptions, however, give a little changed form gāma. The term grāmaka is another expression, which was used to denote a smaller village or a hamlet. In the inscriptions of the South, the terms grāma and grāmaka are in some cases replaced by the terms pallī and pallikā. The villages were made in ancient times agrahāras by allowing the donees to have the priority or the first charge on the produce of the land, which was previously given to the king. The donees were exempted by the kings, the donors from certain liabilities (prihāras), and, instead, provided with certain facilities.

The terms mentioned above and many other similar terms, such as pada, padra, padraka, vāḍa, vāḷa, vāḷaka, kheṭa, kheṭaka, pāṭaka, pāṭalikā, vallī, and vallikā etc., denoting the sense of a village or a hamlet, are, in many cases, associated with the names of the villages so as to become the ending part of the different place-names. We find, moreover, the place-names ending in giri or parvata, denoting a mountain. The names of the holy places end with śrītha. Places with their names ending in vana, patha, garta, putaka, viraka, hālī, gohālī and sthāna are also known to us from the epigraphic sources. Some of the names ending in vāsaka meaning, a place of residence, are already mentioned in the second chapter of the cities, but a few others are incorporated here, keeping in view the possibility of the grant being issued from smaller places encamped by the king.<sup>1</sup>

Inscriptions throw light on the location of the villages in different ways. Firstly, they communicate us an idea about the country, the division and the sub-division to which these villages belonged. It may be recalled here that the villages in certain cases were separated from their original divisions and connected with other divisions. The village Bṛhatprsthā, for example, is said to have been given, having separated it from Dantayavāgu division and having joined it to the group of villages known as Śaḍvīmśad-agrahāra, i.e., thirty-six agrahāras, in such a way that it must be mentioned henceforth in connection with this division<sup>1</sup>.

---

1. See Appendix showing the lists of the place-names ending with the alike terms.

Secondly, the inscriptions provide information regarding the boundaries of the donated villages. Generally, we are informed about the different villages situated in the four directions of the granted places. Sometimes we also get information about the rivers on the banks of which these villages stood and sometimes about other things such as trees, fields, wells and gardens etc.

The villages have, in many cases, been identified with the places wherefrom the grants have been recovered. However, this policy cannot be adopted in all cases due to the possibility of the transformation of the land-grants from one place to another and owing to the probability of shifting of the donees.

Some of the villages mentioned in the votive inscriptions belonged to the places wherefrom the donors hailed. These villages sometimes lie in the vicinity of the site of the vihāra or temple and sometimes at a distant place. It becomes sometimes difficult to propose an identification in the cases where the donee's places happen to be situated far from the sites of donation.

In matters of identification, the evidence of archaeological finds is quite weighty. But it is not available in many cases. Indian literature as well as Greek and Chinese sources even do not help us much in this matter. That is why, most of the suggestions regarding identifications are based on the phonological affinities of the ancient and the modern names of the places.

There is another aspect of this problem also. Some of the ancient villages might have at present ceased to exist. The places situated on the bank of a river may have fallen a prey to the current of the river itself. In such or similar circumstances, we cannot always expect that some ruins reminiscent of the existence of those villages should have forthcome or would be forthcoming in future. Thus many of the place-names would always remain untraceable.

Now follows the description of 877 villages, the names of which have been taken from different inscriptions.

1. EI, XII, p. 5.

ABA

Aba, the etymon of the adjective abeyaka, occurs in two Sāñchī Stūpa inscriptions of the second century A.D.<sup>1</sup> The place may be identified with any one of the seven villages known by the name of Ambagam and Ambagaon, situated in the neighbourhood of Sanchi in Madhya Pradesh.<sup>2</sup>

ABHIRŪPĀ<sup>3</sup>

The place should be traced in the Nellore district, Andhra Pradesh.

ABULĀMĀ

This name is found in one of the Karle cave inscriptions of third century A.D.<sup>4</sup> The place is unidentifiable so far.

ACAVAḌA or ACAVAṬĀ

Four Sanchi Stūpa inscriptions of the third century A.D. refer to this place.<sup>5</sup> It is not identifiable so far.

AḌAYARA

The village Aḍayara was situated in Sarephāhāra-viṣaya.<sup>6</sup> For the identification of the viṣaya, vide supra Chapter I (p. 34).

AGASTIKĀ-GRAHĀRA

Agastikā-grahāra finds mention in two Nogāwā Plates<sup>7</sup> of Dhruvasena II. The donated village may be identified with Agesthi, four miles north of Nogawa.<sup>8</sup>

ĀGHĀAKASĀ

Kof inscription<sup>9</sup> mentions a villager who hailed from Āghāa.

kasā, Sk. Āghātakarṣa. The place is unidentifiable so far.

AJA-KARṆA

The place has been located at Ajangāon, four miles south-east from Tigaon in Chhindwara district, Madhya Pradesh.<sup>1</sup>

ĀJANĀVA

The name occurs in a Sanehi Stūpa inscription.<sup>2</sup> The place is not identifiable.

ĀKĀSA-PADDA

Ākāsa-padda is mentioned in Bashim Plates<sup>3</sup> of Vindhyaśakti II. It was situated near Takālakkhoppaka and it lay on the road leading towards North from Nāndikāḍa. Mirashi<sup>4</sup> seems to be right by identifying Ākāsapadda with Asund, situated about seven miles to the West of Takaligohan, which lies on the road connecting Nanded (Nāndikāḍa) with Bashim.

ĀKHAŚA-VĀḌA

Ākhaśa-vāḍa is mentioned in Amrāvati Buddhist sculpture inscription.<sup>5</sup> The name is similar to Ākāsa-padda mentioned above.

ĀKI

It appears in the Tuṇḍigrāma grant<sup>6</sup> of Vikramendra III. The place should be located in Guntur district, Andhra Pradesh.

AKOTṬAKA

The place has been identified with modern Akāḍia, near Dhasā, lying about two miles to the west of Valabhipur in Bhavanagar district.<sup>7</sup>

AKROLAKA

Pāliṭāṇā Plates<sup>8</sup> of Dhruvasena I record Akrolaka as the name of a donee's residence. The village has been identified with Aklera, about twenty miles from Palitana in Bhavnagar district.<sup>1</sup>

ALANDA-TĪRTHA

The holy place Alanda-tīrtha is described in Satara grant<sup>2</sup> of Viṣṇuvardhana I. The village was situated on the south bank of the Bhīmarathī, on the north of Aṇopalya-agrahāra in Śrīnilaya-bhoga. Ball G. Shastree identified it with Alandi, about twelve miles north of Poona and situated on the north bank of Indrāyaṇī, a tributary of Bhīmā.<sup>3</sup> This identification is not in accordance with the description of the village given in the inscription. The village Alandatīrtha should be located somewhere on the southern bank of the river Bhīmā. It may be mentioned here that Fleet proposed to identify Alanda-tīrtha with Alundah, situated on the bank of Śivagaṅgā, a tributary of the Nīrā, which again flows into the Bhīmā.<sup>4</sup>

ALANIVAŒCI

The place<sup>5</sup> is to be located near Devanuru, situated about fifteen miles south-west of Talavanapura in the Karenad sub-division.

ALATTŪR, ALANTŪRA

The following grants of rulers of the Gaṅga dynasty refer to the city mentioned above :

1. Mallohalli grant<sup>6</sup> of Durvinṭa.
2. Nallala grant<sup>7</sup> of Durvinṭa.
3. Bedirur grant<sup>8</sup> of Bhū-vikrama.

The place is to be located in Coimbatore district, Madras.

ALAVŪRA

The name is found in Durmāya Plates<sup>9</sup> of Ravi-mahārāja. The place should be located in the Holalkere taluq of the Chitaldrug district, Mysore.

AMĀKĀRAKOPA

The place was situated in Hastavaprā-hāra in Surāṣṭra.<sup>1</sup> It should be located in the Bhavnagar district, Gujarat.

AMALA-PAUTIKA-GRĀMA

The village is mentioned in Vappaghoṣavāṭa grant<sup>2</sup> of Jayanāga. The place is unidentifiable.

AMAṆIYA

Keregalur Plate<sup>3</sup> of Mādhava II describes the village Amaṇiya as situated in Sendraka-viṣaya. For the identification of Sendsaka-viṣaya, vide chapter I, Western Deccan (p. 49).

AMBA-GRĀMA

It was situated in Devagrāma-viṣaya, in Koṅgoda-maṇḍala.<sup>4</sup> The place should be located in Ganjam district, Orissa.

AMBILĀ-GRAHĀRA

It occurs in Nandapur grant<sup>5</sup> of Gupta year 169. The place is unidentifiable so far.

ĀMBLODA

Āmbloḍa appears in Bhumarā stone pillar inscription<sup>6</sup> of Hastin and Sarvanātha. It is identical with Bhumarā about nine miles to the north-west of Ucaharā in Satnā district of Madhya Pradesh.

ĀMRA-GARTĀ

Goras grant<sup>7</sup> of Dhruvasena II refers to this place. The place remains untraceable so far.

ĀMRA-GARTIKĀ

The place is mentioned in Mallasarul Copper-plate<sup>1</sup> of Vijaya-sena. It may be identical with Ambahula to the south of Mallasarul, the findspot, in Burdwan district, W. Bengal.

ĀMRAKĀ

It is mentioned in Pārḍi Plates<sup>2</sup> of Dahrasena. The place may be identical with Āmraka-nagara mentioned in Varanasi Plates<sup>3</sup> of Harirāja. Āmraka-nagara has been identified with Sārnāth.<sup>4</sup> If Āmrakā is not identical with Āmraka-nagara, then it should be identified with any one of the villages having the name Ambachh or Āmbāehh, situated about two miles towards the south-west from Kapur in Baroda district of Gujarat.<sup>5</sup>

ĀMRA-TĀKṢAKA

The name is found in the Soro Plates<sup>6</sup> of Somadatta. The place is unidentifiable so far.

ĀMRA-VATĀVAKA

The village was situated in Avaretikā-viśaya,<sup>7</sup> which corresponded roughly to the Chiplun taluq of the Nasik district, Maharashtra.

ĀMUKA-PRADEŚA

It was situated on the border of the granted village Dhava-ṣaṇḍikā.<sup>8</sup> The place should be located in the region of Baghelkhand.

ANANMITA

A resident of Ananmita is mentioned in Sanchi Stūpa inscription.<sup>9</sup> Ananmita may be located in the vicinity of Sanchi in Madhya Pradesh.

ANDHA-SUBHIKṢA

The place should be located in Balasore district, Orissa.<sup>1</sup>

ANDORAKĀ-GRAHĀRA

The village is described in Andhavarām Plates<sup>2</sup> of Indravarman. It is called Āndoreppa in the record<sup>3</sup> of Anantaśakti-varman. The place is identical with Andhavaram, the findspot.

ĀNDOREPPA

vide s.v. Andorakā-grahāra.

ĀNEGALLI

The place should be located in the Holalkere taluq of the Chitaldrug district, Mysore.<sup>4</sup>

AṆIMUKTA-KOṆAKA

This village should be located in Baghelkhand.<sup>5</sup>

AṆJANAKA

The village was situated in Mālava-bhukti.<sup>6</sup> It has been identified with Aiyana, ten miles north of Nogawa, Gujarat.

AṆJANA-VĀṬAKA

The village occurs in Indore Plates<sup>7</sup> of Pravarasena II. As suggested by Dr. Mirashi, it is identical with Añjanavāḍī, five miles south-east of Kosamba in Balaghat district in Madhya Pradesh.<sup>8</sup>

AṆKOLLIKĀ

The place was situated on the bank of Śūlanadī.<sup>9</sup> It may be identical with Aroli, on the right bank of the Sūr, about eight miles south-east of Nagardhan.<sup>10</sup>

AṆOPALYA or AṆOPALLI-AGRAHĀRA

The place was situated adjacent to the village Alanda-tīrtha in Śrīnilaya-bhoga.<sup>1</sup> The village is not traceable on the map.

ANTARIKṢA or ANDARI

The following grants mention this place :

1. Mallohalli grant<sup>2</sup> of Durvinīta.
2. Nallala grant<sup>3</sup> of Durvinīta.
3. Bedirur grant<sup>4</sup> of Bhūvikrama.

The village is identical with modern Andari, situated in Coimbatore district, Tamil Nadu.

ĀNTUKKŪRA

Gorantla Plates<sup>5</sup> of Atiivarman mention this place. As suggested by Mr. Dubreuil, it is identical with Andukuru, a village two miles east of Krosur and twelve miles from Amarāvati.<sup>6</sup>

ANUGĀMI

Anugāmi is mentioned in Nasik cave inscription<sup>7</sup> of Uṣavadāta. The village is unidentifiable so far.

ANUPUMĪYA

The place occurs in Vala grant<sup>8</sup> of Dhruvasena I. The place has not been identified so far.

APARA-KAKHAḌI

The village Apara-Kakhaḍi, i.e., Western Kakhaḍi appears in Nasik cave inscription<sup>9</sup> of Siri Sadakaṇi. The place should be located in the vicinity of Nasik in Maharashtra State.

ĀPIṬṬI

The village was situated in the Sātāhani-raṣṭra, which corresponds roughly to the present Bellary district, Mysore.<sup>10</sup>

ARAHANNA or ĀRAHANNA

Khurdā grant<sup>1</sup> of Mādhava refers to this place. R.C. Majumdar, proposes to identify it with the village Aryoun, near Khurdā.<sup>2</sup>

ĀRĀMAKA

It is found in Indore Plates<sup>3</sup> of Pravarasena II. The village was possibly situated in the vicinity of Kosamba (Kosambaka), Kunār (Kovidāraka) and Anjanavadi (Añjana-vāṭaka), all situated in Balāghat district, Madhya Pradesh.

ARAPĀNA

The place is mentioned in five Sanchi Stūpa inscriptions.<sup>4</sup> It is unidentifiable.

ARDHAKĀMAṆDUKA

The village was situated in Parakkhala-mārga-viṣaya.<sup>5</sup> The place and the district (viṣaya) have not been identified so far.

ARDHAKARAKĀ-GRAHARA<sup>6</sup>

It is associated with the sub-division (vīṭhi) called Vakkattaka, which itself is identical with Baktā to the east of Gohagrāma on the Dāmodar to the south-east of Mallasūrul.

AŚĀDHAKA

It was situated in Tuḍā-rāṣṭra.<sup>7</sup> Mirashi identifies Āśādhaka with Asoud, about two miles to the north of Mahānadi, which is within a distance of fifteen to twenty miles from the villages Tunda, Tundra, Tundri or Tundragaon, reminiscent of ancient Tuḍā-rāṣṭra.<sup>8</sup>

AŚIKĀ

Musharfa stone inscription<sup>9</sup> refers to this place. Dr. D. C. Sircar suggests that Aśikā may be the ancient name of modern Musharfa near Kosam about thirty-five miles from Allahabad.<sup>1</sup> From the Bṛhatsamhitā of Varāhamihira, we learn of a people known as Aśika or Asika. But it is not easy to say that the Aśikas were the inhabitants of Aśikā mentioned in the Musharfa inscription.

ASI-KHETAKA

The village was situated in Mosini-pathaka.<sup>2</sup> It has been identified with Āskheḍā on the southern bank of the river Mosam in the Belgaon taluq of Nasik district.

AŚILĀ-PALLIKĀ

The place-name occurs in Alina grant<sup>3</sup> of Dharasena II. It has been identified with Asapalli, Asamal or Asarva, at a distance of ten miles from Baryadi and near Ahmedabad in Gujarat State.<sup>4</sup> It represents the site of old city of Karṇāvati.

ASIMBĀLA

The village is mentioned in Nallala Plates<sup>5</sup> of Durvinṣa. It should be located in Coimbatore district, Tamil Nadu.

ASI-TAMASĀ

The place is mentioned in a Barhut inscription.<sup>6</sup> The name suggests that it was a locality situated near the confluence of the rivers Asi and Tamasā (modern Tons running about two miles from Barhut).<sup>7</sup>

ĀŚRAMAKA

The village was situated on the north bank of the river Tamasā.<sup>8</sup> The place should be located in Baghelkhand.

ASTIHAREVA

Astihareva appears in Tekkali Plates<sup>9</sup> of Umayarman. It has been identified with modern Atava in Srungavarapukota taluq in the Visakhapatnam district.<sup>2</sup>

ASTIHOṆA-RĀMA-GRĀMA

The name possibly denotes two adjacent places. It is mentioned in Ningondi grant<sup>3</sup> of Prabhāñjanavarman. We may compare the name Astihona with Astihareva mentioned in Tekkali Plates<sup>4</sup> of Umavarman.

AŚVATTHA-KHEṬAKA

The village was situated on the road leading to Varada-kheṭa, and in the bhoga of Loha-nagara.<sup>5</sup> According to Mirashi, the site of the modern village Pattan in Betul district seems to be the representative of ancient village Aśvattha-kheṭaka.

ĀŚVINIKA-PUTRA

The place was situated in the south of Kikkaṣā-putra in Kālāpaka-pathaka in Surāṣṭra.<sup>6</sup> It is to be located near Kalawad in Jamnagar district.

AṬAVI-PĀṬAKA

It was situated in Saṅgamakheṭaka-viṣaya, which corresponds to Sankheda in Gujarat.<sup>7</sup>

AVAḌĀRA

Avadāra is mentioned in Supia pillar inscription<sup>8</sup> of Gupta year 141. The locality of Avadāra appears to be near modern Supia in Rewa district in Madhya Pradesh.

AVAṆCAPALI

It was situated in Avaretikā-viṣaya, which corresponds roughly to the chiplun taluq in Nasik.<sup>9</sup>

AVAREṆGA

The place is mentioned alongwith Kaliṅga-nagara in Srikaku-

CHAPTER IV

THE MOUNTAINS

The entire mountain system of the world, as conceived by the Purāṇic writers, centres round the Meru, the mountain of gold, which is supposed to stand in the middle of Ilāvṛta, a highly elevated sub-continental region (varṣa) of Jambudvīpa.<sup>1</sup> Below the central mountain are the four viṣkambha parvatas (Subjaacent hills), Mandara, Gandhamādana, Vipula and Supārśva. Six sub-continental ranges (varṣaparvata) lie to the north and the south of the Meru—Nīla, Śveta and Śrṅgi to the north and Niṣadha, Hemakūṣa and Himavat to the south. In addition to these, every varṣa has seven principal ranges styled Kulaparvata (group mountain or clan mountain) besides a number of small hills (kṣudraparvata) which are situated near these. Mahendra, Malaya, Sahya, Śuktimān, Rkṣa, Vindhya and Pāripātra are the names of the kulaparvatas of Bhāratavarṣa given in the great Epic and the Purāṇas.<sup>2</sup> These kulaparvatas are associated with a distinct country or tribe. As ascertained by Professor Hemachandra Raychaudhuri, Mahendra is the mountain par excellence of the Kālīṅgas, Malaya of the Pāṇḍyas, Sahya of the Aparāntas, Śuktimat of the people of Bhallāṣa, Rkṣa of the people of Māhiṣmatī, Vindhya of the Āṣavyas and other forest folk of Central India, and Pāripātra or Pāriyātra of the Niṣadas.<sup>3</sup>

The Nasik Prasasti<sup>4</sup> of Gautamīputa Śātakarṣi refers to the mountains of all categories mentioned above. Besides the Central mountain Meru, we find here the references to Mandara (viṣkambha), Himavata (varṣaparvata) and to all the kulaparvatas with the exception of Śuktimān, and to many other mountains, which may be classified under kṣudraparvatas.

Various inscriptions describe the mountain Meru as mighty,<sup>1</sup> firm,<sup>2</sup> rugged,<sup>3</sup> piled with huge rocks,<sup>4</sup> and as mountain of the Gods<sup>5</sup> (amara-bhūdhara). In the Mandsaur inscription<sup>6</sup> of the Guild of the Silk-weavers, the mountains Sumeru and Kailāsa are described as the large breasts of earth. Another Mandsaur inscription<sup>7</sup> refers to the rocks of the glens of the Sumeru being split open by the blows of the horns of the bull of the God Śūlapāni. The Vasantagadh inscription<sup>8</sup> of 625 A.D. makes the mention of long durability of the Meru mountain.

The mountain has been identified with the Altai mountain in Central Asia.<sup>9</sup> Altai is Altai-Ula in Mongolian, which means, mountain of gold. According to the Kālikā-purāṇa, the Jambu river flows from this mountain.<sup>10</sup> The God Śiva saw the summit of this mountain.<sup>11</sup>

The viṣkambha mountain Mandara occurs in the Nasik eulogy<sup>12</sup> of Gautamiputra Śātakarṇi, who is said to be equal in strength with this mountain along with Himavat and Meru. In the Aphsad Stone inscription<sup>13</sup> of Ādityasena, Mandara is described as a traditional mountain utilized in churning the formidable Milk-ocean. Dr. Sircar enlists this mountain among the western boundaries of Cakravartī-kṣetra, which is mentioned while describing the traditional account of digvijaya of a certain monarch, in some epigraphic or literary record.<sup>14</sup>

The varṣaparvata Himavat is also mentioned in the Nasik Prasasti, which speaks of its might. The great height of its peak is referred to in the Uttara-Kāśī inscription<sup>15</sup> of Guha. Some of the inscriptions mention the association of this mountain with the river Gaṅgā. Mandsaur Stone Pillar inscription of Yaśodharman describes it as tuhina-sikharin (i.e., the mountain of snow), the table lands of which are embraced by the river Gaṅgā.<sup>1</sup> Another Mandsaur inscription<sup>2</sup> says that the torrent flowing high and low of the river Gaṅgā spreads abroad from the mountain Himavat. Similarly, in Ganjam Plates<sup>3</sup> of Śaśāṅka-rāja, the streams of surasarit (Gaṅgā) are described as the split up and dashed outside by many masses of rocks at her fall on the top of the Himālayas.

The tuhina-sikharin, himagiri, kṣitidhara, durga,<sup>4</sup> śailendra,<sup>5</sup> and girivara<sup>6</sup> are the different names and attributes used for the mighty Himavat mountain by the authors of various inscriptions.

The Himavat range is said to have stretched along, on the north of Bhārata, like the string of a bow.<sup>7</sup> The simile, which refers to a drawn bow with the string angular in the middle, implies that the name Himavat was applied to the entire mountain range that stretches from the Sulaiman along the West of Punjab and whole of the northern boundary of India to the Assam and Arakan hill in the east including a number of peaks and smaller mountain ranges.<sup>8</sup>

Kailāsa range (the kṣudraparvata or the Himavat) formed a part of the Himavat,<sup>9</sup> though according to the Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa, it was a separate mountain in the north of Himavat—both of them marking off Bhārata from the Central varṣas.<sup>10</sup> Inscriptions generally describe the loftiness of the peak of the Kailāsa mountain. The peak of the Tiraṅbu mountain,<sup>11</sup> the Shrine of the God Viṣṇu at Daśapura,<sup>12</sup> the buildings of the city of Daśapura,<sup>13</sup> all are said to be resembling the lofty peak of the Kailāsa mountain. According to the Lalitavistara the big places of king Śuddhodana are said to have resembled the Kailāsa mountain.

Kailāsa is situated about twenty-five miles to the north of Mānasarovara.<sup>1</sup> The Kailāsa range runs parallel to the Ladakh range, fifty miles behind the latter. It contains a number of groups of giant peaks. The Mahābhārata includes the Kumaun and Garhwal mountains in Kailāsa range.<sup>2</sup> According to Bhāgavata-purāṇa, Kailāsa is known as Bhūteśa-giri surrounded by the river Nandā.<sup>3</sup>

Among the other hills associated with the Himālayas, we know of Krauñca-śaila from Dubi Plates<sup>4</sup> of Bhāskaravarman. Pargiter points out that Krauñca 'appears to have been a portion of the Maināka mountains in the great Himavat mountain system'. It is 'the portion of the Himālaya chain bounding Nepal as the extreme North-west'.<sup>5</sup> There is a pass known as Māna Pass and it lies higher up in the Himālaya range, beyond Badrinath. It is mentioned in Devaprayāg Brahmi inscription<sup>6</sup> as Māna parvata. Dr. Chhabra observes that the occurrence of the name on the rock in question tends to indicate that the range of hills behind the occurrence of the Alakanandā and Bhāgirathī at Devaprayāg was known as Māna.<sup>7</sup>

Among the kulaparvatas, Mahendra comes first. Under the name of Mahida, it is said in the Nasik eulogy<sup>8</sup> to have been conquered by Gautamīputra Śātakarpi. About the term Mahendra-giri in Allahabad Inscription<sup>9</sup> of Samudragupta, we are not certain whether it denotes the famous kulaparvata or it is the name of a king. Mahendra mountain is said to have formed the souther boundary of the empire, which Yaśodharman claims to have subdued.<sup>10</sup> On its pure summit was established the holy Gokarṇa-svāmi, whose feet were worshipped by Indravarman, Anantavarman and Jayavarmadeva—the kings of Kālīṅga.<sup>11</sup>

Mr. Pargiter identified the Mahendra range with the portion of Eastern Ghats between the Godāvarī and Mahānadī rivers, part of which near Ganjam in Orissa.<sup>1</sup> This portion of Eastern Ghats is still known by the names of Mahendra-giri and Mahendrā-cala. Raghuvamśa places Mahendra in Kalīṅga<sup>2</sup> and Bhāgavata Purāṇa, between Gaṅgā-Sāgara-Saṅgama and Sapta-Godāvari.<sup>3</sup> But this restriction is not always observed by our ancient writers. It appears from the Rāmāyaṇa that whole of the Eastern Ghats is known as the Mahendra-parvata.<sup>4</sup> Pargiter regards the Mahendra of the Rāmāyaṇa as altogether distinct from Mahendra of the Purāṇas, and identifies the former with the most southerly spur of the Travancore hills.<sup>5</sup> But Dr. Raychaudhuri has argued with good reasons that the authors of the Rāmāyaṇa and the Purāṇas meant the same range. According to him, the position of Mahendra in relation to Malaya and Sahya as described in the Lankā-kāṇḍa (4, 92-94) leaves little room for doubt that Mahendra of the Rāmāyaṇa is the famous kulaparvata of the same name mentioned in the Bhuvanakośa (Mārķ. 57-10) in juxtaposition with Malaya and Sahya.<sup>6</sup> It embraced the entire chain of hills that may be taken to start from Mahendragiri or Mahendrācala in the Ganjam district and run on to the Kulakkal hills, also styled Mahendragiri, in the Tinnevely district of the Madras State.<sup>7</sup> It may be mentioned here that according to the Bāṇa's Harjācarita, the Mahendra mountain joins the Malaya-parvata.<sup>8</sup>

The Epic and Purāṇas speak of certain minor hills (kṣudra parvata), which may conveniently be associated with the Mahendra ranges.<sup>9</sup> These are the Śrīparvata and the Puṣpagiri etc. Śrīparvata is frequently mentioned in the inscriptions. Five inscriptions<sup>10</sup> of the early rulers of the Ikṣvāku dynasty (225-360 A.D.) refer to this mountain under the name Siripavata. One of these inscriptions describes the building of a Caitya-hall at Siripavata on the east side of Vijayapurī at the convent.<sup>11</sup> Tal-gunda inscription of Kākustha-varman also mentions the Śrīparvata mountain. Some of the rulers of the Viṣṇukunḍin dynasty are described in their inscriptions as worshippers of lord of Śrīparvata.<sup>1</sup>

Śrīparvata is usually identified by scholars with Siriṭana of the Nasik Prasasti.<sup>2</sup> According to J. Burgess, Śrīparvata is identical with Śrīśailam in Kurnool district of Andhra Pradesh, on the south of the Krishna river, at the north-western extremity of Kurnool territory, about 102 miles West-south-west of Dharanikot and eighty-two miles East-north-east of Kurnool and fifty miles from the Krishna Railway station.<sup>3</sup> Dr. Vogel on the contrary identifies Śrīparvata with a small hillock, an offshoot of Nallamalai range located in Nagarjunakonda valley itself.<sup>4</sup> In the light of Śrīparvata being mentioned to the east of Vijayapuri in an inscription already referred to, Dr. Vogel's identification is more tenable.

Puṣpa-giri is mentioned in its Prakrit form Pupha-giri, in the Nagarjunakond Second Apsidal Temple inscription.<sup>5</sup> It was the site of a Stone Temple founded by Bodhisiri. Pupha-giri lay eight miles to the north of Cuddapah, the district headquarters in Andhra Pradesh.<sup>6</sup> Near Pupha-giri, there is another hill known at Cula-Dharmma-giri or Mahā-Dharmma-giri, which seems to be the ancient name of a hill, now known as Naharallabodu.<sup>7</sup>

Another Nagarjunakond inscription mentions Purva-sela, which possibly refers to the mountain on which the Pūrva-saila monastery mentioned in the Dharanikoṭa Dharmacakra Pillar inscription was situated.<sup>8</sup>

The southern portion of the Eastern Ghats was possibly known as Cakora-pavata, which is mentioned in the Nasik eulogy.<sup>9</sup> The name also occurs in the Harṣa-carita<sup>10</sup> of Bāṇa.

Another Kulaparyata Malaya, which also figures in the Nasik Prasasti, is represented by that portion of Western Ghats, which stretches from Nilgiri to Kanyakumari. The expression malaya in Trikūṭa-malaya, which is referred to in Ipur Plates<sup>1</sup> of Mādhava II is sometimes taken in its general sense of a hill.<sup>2</sup> Dr. Sircar, however, takes the term Trikūṭa-malayādhipati to mean, Lord of Trikūṭa and Malaya.<sup>3</sup>

Another Kūlaparvata Sahya, which also finds mention in the Nasik eulogy, is represented by the Western Ghats, which form an almost continuous wall with an elevation of about four thousand feet for the greater part of its length. Kālidāsa describes this mountain as nitamba of the earth,<sup>4</sup> and connects it with the Aparāntas.

Pāṇdraṅgapalli grant<sup>5</sup> of Avidheya describes the hill Mahādeva-giri, to the east of which flowed the river Ane (Yenna). The Mahadeva-giri has been identified with the Mahadeo Hills, one of the important spurs of the Sahya mountain. The Mahadeo Hills start about ten miles north of Mahābleśvara and stretch across the whole breadth of Satara district in Maharashtra. Professor Mirashi, however, points out the difficulty in identifying Mahadeo Hills with the Mahādeva-giri of the grant. The difficulty arises because the Mahadeo Hills lie to the east of the Ane or Yenna river, while according to the grant, the Ane or Yenna river flowed to the east of Mahādeva-giri. He, therefore, suggests that Mahādeva-giri should be identified with the Mahābleśvara hills in the Satara district.<sup>6</sup>

Trikūṭa-parvata is another mountain, which is associated with the Sahya mountain. It is mentioned in the Chezaria inscription<sup>7</sup> of Ānanda family and in Ipur Plates<sup>8</sup> of Mādhavarman II. Trikūṭa is placed by Kālidāsa in the Aparānta, i.e., Northern Konkan.<sup>9</sup> The mountain, it appears, gave its name to the Traikūṭaka dynasty, who exercised away over Aparānta and other countries in the fifth century A.D. Mr. B.V. Krishna Rao, however, identifies Trikūṭa with Kotappakonda near Kavur in the Narasaraopeta taluq of the Guntur district.<sup>10</sup> However, as pointed out by V.S. Ramachandra Murty, there is little evidence to support this identification.<sup>1</sup>

Triraśmi or Tiraṇhu is another mount, which is associated with the Sahya mountain. Apart from the Sanskrit name Triraśmi, we find the Prakrit forms Tiraṇhu and Terāṇhu, used in the inscriptions.<sup>2</sup> Uṣavadāta is said to have caused a cave to be made in Triraśmi hills,<sup>3</sup> while the grand-mother of Vasiṣṭhiputra Śrī Pulumāyi donates the village Pisājipidaka, which lay on the South-west side on the mount Tiraṇhu.<sup>4</sup> The inscriptions of Śrī Sadakaṇṭ and of the Ābhīra ruler Īvarasena generally refer to the mendicants dwelling in some monastery on this mount.<sup>5</sup> The Triraśmi mountain is identical with present Pāṇḍu-Lepa hills, situated about three hundred feet above the road level at Nasik.<sup>6</sup> As regards the name Triraśmi, Pandit Bhagvanlal has suggested that its pyramidal or triple fire-tongue shape was the origin of this name.<sup>7</sup>

Kaṇha-giri, associated with the Sahya mountain, is said to have been conquered by Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi in his Nasik eulogy.<sup>8</sup> Two Kanheri Cave inscriptions<sup>9</sup> mention Kaṇha-sela, which is identical with Kaṇha-giri Skt. Kṛṣṇa-giri. A caliya is said to be erected at the monastery on Kṛṣṇa-giri by an inhabitant of Kāṇaka in the Sindhuvijaya in Kanheri Plate<sup>10</sup> of Traikūṭakas of 493 A.D. A big group of caves known as Kanheri situated on the island of Salsetta about twenty miles from Bombay is taken to be identical with Kṛṣṇa-giri or Kaṇha-giri.

The Mārakuṭa and Mānamukaṭa hills are mentioned respectively in Bedsa and Junnar inscriptions.<sup>11</sup> Mārakuṭa (Skt. Mārakūṭa) was probably the ancient name of the hill in which the Bedsa caves were excavated, and Mānamukaṭa seems to be the old name of the Mānamaṭa hill in which the Junnar caves are excavated.

Vāsaka mountain under the Prakrit name Vasaa is mentioned in Pādāna Rock inscription.<sup>1</sup> Pandit Bhagvanlal Indraji thinks that Vāsaka is the original name of the Padana hill, about seven miles north of Bombay, eighteen miles south of Sopara and three miles north-east of Goregaon station on the Western Railway.<sup>2</sup> Padana hill was also called Musalaka due to a sage of that name, who lived on its top.

There are two small hills Kuṇḍa-giri and Milikunda mentioned in Davangera and Koramanga grants<sup>3</sup> of Ravivarman. Kuṇḍa-giri is taken identical with Kudgere in the Shimoga district. In the Davange grant, it is said to have resisted the missile let down upon it by Raghu but that it submissively obeyed Ravi's command.

The three other kulaparvatas, Ṛkṣa, Vindhya and Pāripātra, are mentioned under the names Chavata, Vijha and Paricāta in the Naṣik Prasthā of Gautami-putra Śātakarṇi. The first two are referred to by Ptolemy as the Ouxenton and Ouindion ranges.<sup>4</sup> According to Ptolemy, Ouxenton (Ṛkṣavant) is the source of the Dosaron, which, according to Professor Raychaudhuri sounds very much like the Daśārṇa, modern Dhasan near Sagar in Madhya Pradesh.<sup>5</sup> This proves that the Ṛkṣa lay in the region of the central Vindhya. The same thing appears clear also from Indian evidence. The Harivaṃśa refers to the city of Māhiṣmatī, the capital of Narmadānūpa as nestling under the shelter of the mount Ṛkṣavat. Nīlakanṭha, the commentator of the Harivaṃśa, places the city to the north of the Vindhya and the south of the Ṛkṣa.<sup>6</sup> The Nalopākhyāna of the Mahābhārata places the Ṛkṣa mountain between Avanti and Dakṣiṇāpatha. Thus Ṛkṣa, when referred to incidentally in literature, is invariably associated with the Middle Narmadā region of which Māhiṣmatī was the most important city, and the Daśārṇa, a notable river, and the mountain lay in the region of the central Vindhya, near Sagar.

Four Sanchi Stūpa inscriptions<sup>7</sup> of the third century A.D. mention Acavāḍa and Acavāṭa, which may be identified with the mount Ṛkṣavat. The Ṛkṣa is probably so called, because it stood in a territory, which abounded in bears (rkṣas).<sup>1</sup> Dhūmra, one of the commanders of Rāma's army is said to be the king of the bears living on the mount Rkṣavat.<sup>2</sup> It seems that central part of the Vindhya being abounded in bears came to be denoted by the second name Rkṣavat.

Apart from its mention in the Nasik eulogy, the Vindhya mountain is mentioned in eight other inscriptions. Mandsaur inscription of Yaśodharman and Viṣṇuvardhana refers to a tract of land, containing many countries, which lie between the Vindhya from the slopes of the summits of which there flows the pale mass of the waters of Revā, and the mountain Pāriyātra, on which the trees are bent down in (their) frolicsome leaps by the long-tailed monkeys (and stretches) upto the ocean (Sindhu).<sup>3</sup> Grants of Buddharāja, Śaṅkaragana and Dadda II mention the waterless forests of the Vindhya.<sup>4</sup> Mandsaur inscription of Yaśodharman and Viṣṇuvardhana also refers to the crevices of the Vindhya mountains being made resonant with the noise of the armies journeying through their forests.<sup>5</sup> In Nagarjuni Hill Cave inscription of the Maukhari ruler Anantavarman, Nagarjuni hill is said to be a part of the Vindhya range.<sup>6</sup> Jaunpur inscription describes the lord of the Āndhras seeking shelter in the crevices of the Vindhya mountains.<sup>7</sup>

The Vindhya mountain comprised the chains of the ranges at the source of the Narmadā and Tāpī, and though most conspicuous in western and central India, it extends right across the Peninsula, until passing through the neighbourhood of Gaya, its easternmost spurs reach and disappear in the valley of the Gaṅgā at Rajmahal. Moreover, it appears that Vijha of the Nasik Pratāpī denotes 'the eastern Vindhya'.

Among the hills associated with the eastern Vindhya, most significant is Gorāṣṭhagiri or Goradhagiri. It is mentioned by different names in different periods of ancient history. As mentioned in the inscriptions of Aśoka and of his grandson Daśaratha, it was known as Khalatika-pavata.<sup>8</sup> From Patañjali's reference, we infer that there were forests in the locality of Khalatika-parvata which may have provided pasture land for the cattle of neighbourhood.<sup>1</sup> The name Goradha-giri is mentioned in two Barabar Cave inscriptions<sup>2</sup> and in Hathigumpha inscription<sup>3</sup> of Khāravela. Formerly, it was identified by Beglar and others with the Baithan hill five or six miles to the west of Rajagṛha valley.<sup>4</sup> In the light of the newly discovered Barabar Cave inscriptions, Jackson suggested the identification of Goradha-giri with the Barabar hills, about fifteen miles north of Gaya, on the old route from Gaya to Patna.<sup>5</sup> According to Dr. M. S. Pandey, the roaming about of the animals on this hill gave it the name Go-ratha, i.e., the vehicle for animals.<sup>6</sup> The Mahābhārata speaks of its beautiful trees and large number of animals.<sup>7</sup> Jackson noticed traces of a large ancient settlement at Barabar hills, but he was not certain whether the site is as old as the age of the great Epic.<sup>8</sup> He has described immense fortifications on the hill-top, which served the purpose of an important outpost for Rājagṛha, the ancient capital of Magadha.<sup>9</sup>

In the Barabar Hill Cave inscription of Anantavarman of sixth or seventh century A.D., the hill is called of Pravara-giri. This name seems to have been the origin of the ward Barabar. For detailed accounts of Barabar hills, see Dr. D. R. Patil's Antiquarian Remains in Bihar, pp. 15 ff.

Rajgir Stone Image inscription<sup>10</sup> records the name of Vipula, which is one of the five hills of Rajgir. Vipula is associated here as well as in Jaina tradition with the king Śrenika. The Mahābhārata also mentions this hill, while enumerating the five hills at Rājagṛha.<sup>11</sup> At one place in the Saṃyutta Nikāya, it is declared to be the best of the Rājagṛha hills.<sup>12</sup> At another place in the same work, it is described as a massive hill.<sup>13</sup> The hill stands on the north-eastern side of the hotsprings and to the north of Gijjhakūṭa inscription contains a reference to two rivers Suvarṇasiktā and Palāśinī of this mountain. The mountain is identical with Girnar hill, about a mile to the east of the town Junagarh.

Junagarh inscription<sup>1</sup> of Skandagupta describes Raivataka as the source of Palāśinī and Siktā-vilāsinī. Siktāvilāsinī may easily be taken identical with Suvarṇasiktā of Junagarh inscription of Rudradāman. This description identifies the two mountains known as Ūrjayat and Raivataka.

The following hills mentioned in the inscriptions are not traditionally associated with the Kulaparvatas.

NADODA-PAVATA

It is mentioned in four Bharhut Buddhist Stone inscriptions.<sup>2</sup> It is somewhat difficult to ascertain that Nadoda-Pavata refers to one mountain or two mountains, i.e., Nadoda and Pavata, or one mountain with two peaks, Nadoda and Pavata. According to Purāṇas, Nārada (possibly Nadoda) was the name of one mountain and Nārada and Parvata were two off-shoots thereof.<sup>3</sup> J'essantara-Jātaka mentions Gandhamādana, Nārada and Parvata in connection with the Vaṅka mountain.<sup>4</sup> It is possible that the range was either called Vakra or Gandhamādana, of which Gandhamādana, Vakra, Nārada, Parvata, and the rest were separate mountains.

UDAYĀDRI

This occurs in Davangere Plate<sup>5</sup> of Ravivarman. It is the Sunrise mountain, which is so often referred to in the literature and generally mentioned, while describing the divijaya of a certain monarch.

The following hills are mentioned in the inscriptions. Among these hills, there are certain hills, whose identity is unknown or uncertain.

ĀRANYAKŪPAGIRI<sup>6</sup>

It is to be located in the vicinity of Samoli in Rajasthan. The hill possessed some mines which were a means of livelihood for the migrants of Vajjanagara.

BHRŪGĀRA-PARVATA<sup>1</sup>

It has been identified with modern Arang (Raipur district), twenty-two miles from Raipur, on the Raipur-Sambalpur road and four miles from the Mahanadi river.<sup>2</sup>

DOLĀDRI<sup>3</sup>

It is modern Dalapurvata, on which is situated the temple of Cāngunārūyaṇa, which is about five miles to the North-east of Kathmandu in Nepal.

GOPA<sup>4</sup>

It is the hill on which the fortress of Gwalior stands.

KAṬAVAPRA<sup>5</sup>

It is the Chandragiri hill at Śravaṇa-Belgola in Mysore.

KOŚAVARDHANA

It is described as a mountain from whose edge Hanumān took his leap.<sup>6</sup> Dr. Fleet identifies it with the hill on which the fort of Shergadh (Kota district) stands.<sup>7</sup>

KUMĀRĪ-PARVATA<sup>8</sup>

Dr. Barua identified it with Udayagiri-Khandagiri hills in Orissa.<sup>9</sup>

It is probably the hill known as Ramsej, about six miles to the north of Nasik.<sup>11</sup>

Its identity is unknown. The mount seems to be named after the king Pṛthivīmalla-varman.

RĀYA-SELA<sup>2</sup>

Nothing is known about its identity.

SEṬA or SEḌA-GIRI<sup>3</sup>

Nagarjunakonda inscription speaks of the installation of Lord Aṣṭabhujaśvāmin on the Seḍa-giri, and also of the excavation of two tanks at Seṭagiri and at Mṇḍerā. Seṭagiri has been identified with Saṭagara of the Nanaghat cistern inscription,<sup>4</sup> which is further identified with the Nanaghat. However, the recent discovery of Nāgārjunakonda inscription throws some fresh light, on the ground of which, Seṭagiri is said to be identical with the range of the hills, of which the Siddhaldhari, standing within two hundred yards of the findspot of the Nagarjuna epigraph, formed a part.<sup>5</sup>

UCCAKALPA<sup>6</sup>

The word Uccakalpa literally means 'that which is but short of being a high place'. The name possibly denotes a hill with a town on it. It should be located in Baghelkhand.

VIṢṆUPADA-GIRI

It is the mount where king Candra is said to have installed his flag-staff in honour of Lord Viṣṇu after returning from his dig-vijaya.<sup>7</sup> The mount has been variously identified with the sites at Mehrauli,<sup>8</sup> Mathura,<sup>9</sup> Hardwar,<sup>10</sup> Mandāra<sup>11</sup> near

CHAPTER V

THE RIVERS

The rivers generally occur in the inscriptions in the context of the boundaries of the different places referred to therein. It is along the banks of the rivers and in close proximity to them that we can trace the growth of tribal settlements and mighty kingdoms, prosperous towns and fertile villages, religious shrines and peaceful hermitages. The town of Vanavāsī, the capital of the Kadambas, is said to have there the chain of the lines of the swans sporting in the lofty waves of the river Varadā.<sup>1</sup> Gangadhar inscription<sup>2</sup> describes various means of adornment affecting the city of Gangadhar, which stood on the bank of the river Gargarā. The name of the fort Gomati-kattaka<sup>3</sup> indicated that it stood along the river Gomati.

The villages Tiverekheṭa and Ghūikhheṭa are said to have been situated on the south bank of the river Amveviaraka.<sup>4</sup> The river Ane flowed through the hamlet Javala (Jaoli in Satara district).<sup>5</sup>

The river Umā formed the eastern boundary of the donated village Kothuraka.<sup>6</sup> Similarly, the river Tamasī is mentioned in connection with the location of the donated village Āśramaka.<sup>7</sup> Arang grant<sup>8</sup> of Bhīmasena II, was moreover, issued from the river called Suvarṇanadī. Nagardhan Plates<sup>9</sup> of Svāmīrāja record that the town Acalapura was situated on the bank of Śūlanadī. The river Primati flowed by the village Thānaka.<sup>10</sup> The famous city Prasannapura is said to have been situated on the bank of the river Niṣṭilā.<sup>1</sup> Moreover, the village Carmāṅka was located on the bank of the river Madhunadī.<sup>2</sup> In two Tiruchirapalli Rock inscriptions,<sup>3</sup> the rock Triśirāpalli is stated to have situated on the banks of the river Kāverī. The river Kardamīlā flowed to the east of the village Vaiśyavāṭaka.<sup>4</sup>

The king Uṣavadāta is said to have made gifts of Cows, gold, money and Tirthas, etc. on the bank of the Barmāsā river.<sup>5</sup> Moreover, he established free ferries by boats on the rivers Dāhanukā, Pāradā, Ibā, Damana and Tāpī.<sup>6</sup> A place called Alandaśrītha was located on the south bank of the river Bhīmarathī.<sup>7</sup>

Rivers, not unoften formed the boundary line between janapadas and witnessed many a struggle for supremacy between contending kings and emperors. The Lauhitya (Brahmaputra), which forms the dividing line between Puṇḍravardhana and Kāmarūpa, witnessed the glorious march of Yaśodharman and Mahasenagupta.<sup>8</sup> The Bhaimarathī saw the mighty struggle between Pulakeśin II and Appayika and Govinda.<sup>9</sup> The king Mādhavavarman is said to have crossed the river Godāvarī with the desire of conquering the eastern region.<sup>10</sup> Eran Stone inscription<sup>11</sup> of Budhagupta describes the country, which lay between the rivers Kālindī and Narmadā.

Inscriptions sometimes give a vivid description of the rivers, their sources, banks and their waters, etc. The waters of the Gaṅgā have been described as flowing through the matted hair of God Śiva.<sup>12</sup> The torrents of the waters of the Jāhnavī (Gaṅgā) are represented as washing the sins of the Maṭraka rulers,<sup>13</sup> and the pure waters of the Bhāgīrathī, purifying the Bhāraṣivas.<sup>14</sup> The heavenly descent of the Gaṅgā is also described in two grants.<sup>1</sup> 'High and low torrents of the Gaṅgā spreading abroad from the Himavat'<sup>2</sup>, 'the table-lands of the Himālayas being embraced by the Gaṅgā'<sup>3</sup> and 'the streams of the waters of the Bhāgīrathī being split and dashed outside by many masses of rocks at her fall on the top of the snowy mountain'<sup>4</sup>—are the varient expressions, which all mean to connect the Gaṅgā with her source in a poetic manner.

The river Kāverī is described as having the darting eraps for her tremulous eyes.<sup>5</sup> The cool surfaces of the river Lohitya (Brahmaputra) were used by the Siddhas, who slept there in the shades of the betel-plants that were in full bloom.<sup>6</sup> The water of the Nidilā river are said to be divided by striking with the hips of the beautiful ladies.<sup>7</sup> The river Palāśinī is represented as the hand of the Ūrjayat mountain, decorated with the numerous flowers that grow on the edges of the banks of the river and which is stretched forth with the desire of appropriating the wives of the mighty ocean.<sup>8</sup> The moon origin of the extensive mass of the waters of the Revā, flowing from the slopes of the summits of the Vindhya, is mentioned in a Mandsaur inscription.<sup>9</sup> Aihole inscription records the neighbourhood of the Vindhya destitute of the luster of many sandbanks of the Revā.<sup>10</sup> The banks of the Śālimā river are said to have been covered with flowers of various excellent trees and with the pools of water.<sup>11</sup> The seven mouths of the river Sindhu are mentioned in Mehrauli inscription.<sup>12</sup> Junagarh inscription of Rudradāman refers to the excessively swollen floods of the Suvarṇasiktā Palāśinī and the other streams of the Ūrjayat.<sup>13</sup> banks of the rivers and in close proximity to them helps us in ascertaining the identification of the rivers in question. For example, the village Tiverekheṭa is said to have been situated on the south bank of the river Amveviaraka.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, we find the modern village Tiwarkhed in the Multai tahsil of the Betul district, Madhya Pradesh, situated on the south bank of modern Ambhora river. Thus, it becomes quite easy for us to identify the river Amveviaraka with modern Ambhorā. There are, however, certain rivers like Cīrubenā and others, which could not be identified due to the paucity of the requisite evidence available neither in the inscriptions nor in any other source.

The identifications of the rivers mentioned above and many others which occur in the inscriptions are being given below.

AMVEVIARAKA or AMDEVIARA<sup>2</sup>

It is present Ambhora river in the Multai tahsil of the Betul district, Madhya Pradesh.

ANE<sup>3</sup>

It has been identified with the Yenna, one of the chief feeders of the Krishna.<sup>4</sup> The Yenna rises on the Mahābleśvara plateau and falls into a valley to the east of the Mahābleśvara hills in the Satara district of Maharashtra. It is noteworthy that this river flows through Jaoli (Javala), which is one of the hamlets of the grant.

DANĀSĀ or BARNĀSĀ<sup>5</sup>

It may be identified with any one of the two rivers called Banas—one, which rarely contains any water except during the rains, belongs to the northern Gujarat, passes through Palanpur and falls into the Rann of Cutch, while the other flow through eastern Rajasthan and joins the river Chambal.<sup>6</sup>

BHAIMARATHĪ or BHĪMARATHĪ<sup>1</sup>

It is modern Bhīma, the main tributary of the Krishna.<sup>2</sup> The river figures prominently in the Purāṇas<sup>3</sup> as a Sahya river, which appears to flow in the north-western portion of the district of Poona, from which place, it takes a south-easterly course and flows into the Krishna, north of the district of Raichur.<sup>4</sup>

CĀRUBENNĀ<sup>5</sup>

It should be located in the Nasik district.

CINTERU<sup>6</sup>

The river could not be traced so far.

DĀHANUKĀ<sup>7</sup>

It is probably represented by a creek, south of Dahanu in the Thana district, Maharashtra.<sup>8</sup>

DALIYAVĀVI

It has been identified with the small stream Tulyabhaga, now turned into a drainage canal, which passes by the village Polamuru in East Godavari district, Andhra Pradesh.<sup>9</sup>

DAMANA

The river is modern Daman-gaṅgā, which joins the sea near the Central Union Territory of Daman.<sup>10</sup>

DARBHAVĀHALA<sup>11</sup>

This stream is to be located in the Betul district.

GAṄGĀ<sup>1</sup>

The river is known by the same name even today. Regarding this river, and its tributaries, Arrian observes : 'Megasthenes states that of the two (the Ganges and the Indus), the Ganges is much the larger.....It receives, besides the river Sonos and the Sittokatis and Solomatis, which are also navigable and also the Kondochates and the Sambos and the Magon and the Agoranis and the Omalis. Moreover, there falls into it the Kommenases, a great river, and the Kakouthis and the Andomatis.'<sup>2</sup>

GAṄGINIKĀ<sup>3</sup>

It has been identified with the river Jalangī, a branch of the river Gaṅgā or of Padmā, which unites with Bhāgīrthī. At some distance from Jalangī, near Nadia, there is an important village Gaṅgaṇi, which possibly preserves the name of Gaṅginikā.

GARGARĀ<sup>4</sup>

Gargarā is the ancient name of modern Kālīśind.

GODAVARĪ<sup>5</sup>

The word literally means granting water or kind. It is the largest and the longest river in South India. For details about its course and its tributaries, we may rely on the description given by Dr. B. C. Law in his book Historical Geography of Ancient India, pp. 37-38.

GOMATĪ<sup>6</sup>

It rises in the Shahjahanpur district of Uttar Pradesh, passes Lucknow and Jaunpur and flows into the Gaṅgā about half way between Varanasi and Gazipur.

6. Deo-Baranark Inscription of Jivitaśarma II (CII, III, p. 213) mentions Gomati-śāpaka, which is named after the river Gomati.

It has been identified with Erai, flowing from north to south in the Warora tahsil of Akola district. It finally joins Wardha (ancient Varadā).<sup>2</sup>

IBĀ<sup>3</sup>

This river may possibly be present Ambikā near Jalalpur in Surat district, Gujarat.<sup>4</sup>

JAMBUNADĪ<sup>5</sup>

It should be located in the Damodarpur region in the Dinajpur district.

KAṆHA-BEṀṆĀ<sup>6</sup>

It has been identified by Dr. K. P. Jayaswal with modern Krishna, which rises near Dhom in Satara district and flows through Satara, Belgaum and Bijapur districts.<sup>7</sup> It formed the boundary of the erstwhile Nizam State from Alanpur near Kurnool to Nandigam in Krishna district. According to some scholars, Kaṇha-beṁṇā is the same as Karabena mentioned in Nasik inscription<sup>8</sup> in Cave No. 10 of Pāṇḍuleṇa group, while others suggest the identification of Karabenā with the Kāverī river, a tributary of the Ambikā, which is navigable for boats of less than fifty tons, near where it meets the Ambikā at Vaghrech in Chikhli about thirty miles South-east of Surat.<sup>9</sup> The river Kaṇha-bennā is the same as Kṛṣṇaveṇā or Veṇṇā mentioned in the inscriptions<sup>10</sup> of the sixth and seventh centuries A.D. It may be mentioned here that Dr. B. M. Barua identifies this river with the modern Waina-gaṅgā, which has for its main tributary Kanhan, the two streams uniting in the district of Bhandara.<sup>11</sup>

The river has not been traced so far.

KARṆESAKA<sup>2</sup>

This also remains untraced.

KAUŚIKA or KOŚIKA<sup>3</sup>

Mr. K.M. Gupta identifies it with modern Kusiya, a river to the east of Pañcakhaṇḍa in the Sylhet district.<sup>4</sup> The river Kauśika became so much denuded of its current that it gets the qualifying term śuska (dried) prefixed to it.

KĀVERI<sup>5</sup>

This is the famous Kāveri river of South India. The river is known as 'the beloved of the Pallavas', indicating thereby that a Pallava king ruled here along the banks of the Kāveri river.

LAUHITYA<sup>6</sup>

The river Lauhitya is called by the name of Brahmaputra in modern times.

MADHUNADĪ<sup>7</sup>

The river is represented by modern Chandrabhāgā, one of the tributaries of Pūrṇā.

MAHĀ-NADA<sup>8</sup>

It is identical with the present Mahana, two miles away from Kailvan in Patna district, Bihar.

MAHĀNADĪ<sup>9</sup>

The great river Mahānadi rises in the Raipur district from the Amarkantak range and flows through Orissa into the Bay of Bengal. The name Mahānadi also appears in a Nagarjuni Hill Cave inscription<sup>1</sup> of Anantavarman, but it is very much doubtful that the name represents the famous river Mahanadi, which does not intervene anywhere within two hundred fifty miles of Nagarjuni Hill.

NAMGALA or LAMGALA<sup>2</sup>

Dr. B. M. Barua remarks that it represents the river Nāgāvali, which also bears the name of Laṅgulā.<sup>3</sup> The river Namgala lies between the delta of the Godāvarī and Mahānadi. It rises in the hills at Kalahandi, and flows south through the district of Ganjam to empty itself into the Bay of Bengal.

NARMADĀ<sup>4</sup>

The river Narmadā rises in the Amarakantak range and falls into the Arabian sea.

NIḌILĀ<sup>5</sup>

As regards the identification of this river and of the city Prasannapura, which stood on its bank, we are not in a position to give any definite remarks.

PALĀŚINĪ<sup>6</sup>

It is said to have arisen from the Orjayat mountain, which is identical with Raivataka.

PĀRADĀ<sup>7</sup>

The river is the same as Paradi or Par in Surat.<sup>8</sup>

PERURA<sup>9</sup>

The river passed through the Marukata visaya. There seems to be no such river now.

PHALGUNADĪ<sup>1</sup>

There is a river named Dhova, which runs about four miles from Kailvan in Patna district and which meets the river Mahana at a distance of six miles from that place. The river Dhova seems to have been known by the name Phalgu in the age of the inscription.

PRĀCĪ<sup>2</sup>

The river exists by its old name at present. The nearest distance of this river from Bhubaneswar is twelve to thirteen miles. The river traverses a course of thirty miles before it empties itself into the Bay of Bengal. Both the banks of Prācī abound in the old ruins of temples, wells, tanks and in mounds that wait excavation.<sup>3</sup>

PRIMATĪ<sup>4</sup>

The river flowed near the village Thānaka, which is identical with Thana in Kathiawar region, Gujarat.

REVĀ<sup>5</sup>

The source of the Revā is traceable to the Amarakantak hills adjoining the Vindhya range. The Narmadā and the Revā form a confluence a little above Mandla to flow down under either name.

ŚĀLIMĀ

It has been identified with Sālīā in Banpur in Puri district in Orissa.<sup>6</sup>

SĀRASAVĀHALĀ<sup>7</sup>

This stream appears to have been flowing in Betul district, Madhya Pradesh.

SINDHU

Mehrauli Iron Pillar inscription<sup>4</sup> of king Candra mentions the seven mouths of the river Sindhu. Some of the scholars take the term sindhoh sapta mukhāni to mean 'seven tributaries of the river Indus', while the others take it for the 'seven streams of the river Indus (which are formed when the river Indus falls into the Arabian sea).' As the inscription mentions the country Bāḥḥ (Bāḥlika) beyond the seven mouths of the Indus, the seven mouths of the river cannot be otherwise than the seven tributaries of the Indus, which are well-known from the Vedic period.

ŚOLANADĪ<sup>5</sup>

It is identical with the river Sur, which flows only about four miles east of Nagardhan in Nagpur district.

SUPRAYOGA<sup>6</sup>

It has been identified with modern Manneru, flowing in a north-easterly direction between Kandikuru and Ulavapadu in Nellore district.<sup>7</sup>

SUVARNA-NADĪ<sup>8</sup>

It is identical with the river Śoṇa or Son, which rises from the Amarakantak hills and after a course of about forty miles in Chattisgarh, finally joins the Gaṅgā. The river Śoṇa has been identified with Sonos of Arrian or also with his Eranna-boas. The other Sanskrit name of the Son is Hiranyavāha or Hiranya-vāhin. There are numerous legends about it, one of the most picturesque assigning the origin of the Son and Narmadā to two tears dropped by Brahmā, one on either side of the Amarkantak range. Its waters possess great sanctity, the performance of sandhyā on its banks ensuing absolution and attainment of heaven even to the slayer of a Brahman.

According to Dr. Bhagvanlal Indraji, Suvarṇasiktā is a small perennial stream now called Sonarekhā.

TAMASĀ<sup>2</sup>

The river Tamasā is modern Tamas or Tons of maps which rises in the old Mahiyur State, on the south of Nagaudh, and running through the north part of Rewah flows into the Gaṅgā about eighteen miles to the South-east of Allahabad.<sup>3</sup>

TĀPI<sup>4</sup>

It is known as Tāptī now-a-days, near Surat in Gujarat.

TOṬĪ<sup>5</sup>

Kudalur grant<sup>6</sup> of the Gaṅga king, Mādhavavarman, refers to the river Toṭṭā as situated in the Marukara-viṣaya. The river is untraced so far.

UMĀ<sup>7</sup>

It is more or less certain that the Umā is none else than the Wunnā. The river formed the eastern boundary of the donated village Kothuraka, whose site seems to be occupied by Mangaon on the the right bank of Wunnā.

VARADĀ<sup>7</sup>

The river is identical with modern Wardhā, a tributary of the Godavari. Kālidāsa mentions the river Varadā as dividing the country of Vidarbha.<sup>1</sup>

VĀṢANADĪ<sup>2</sup>

As suggested by Professor D.C. Sircar, the river Vāṣanadī is, most probably, identical with modern Baranaī flowing west to east through the southern part of the Rajshahi district.<sup>3</sup> It may be noted here that Mr. Niradbandhu Sanyal proposed to identify it with a small stream Nagar, which is an off-take of the Karatoyā.<sup>4</sup>

VATSA-VĀHAKA

It is the name of a river on the South-western boundary of Devarakṣita-pāṭaka belonging to Nimba-kūpa-sthaṭṭ.<sup>5</sup>

VENNĀ<sup>6</sup>

The river Vennā may be identical with modern Krishna, which is mentioned as Kṛṣṇavennā in the Purāṇas.<sup>7</sup>

YAMUNĀ<sup>8</sup>

The river is mentioned also by the name Kālindī in Eran Stone inscription<sup>9</sup> of Budhagupta. The river is identical with modern Jumna or Yamunā, joining the Gaṅgā near Allahabad, the Trivenī Saṁgama.

In the end, I would like to mention the names of the tanks and the lakes, described in the inscriptions. We find mention of a tank called Āmrilikā-vāpi situated in Bhallara village of the district of Hastavaprā-haranī<sup>10</sup>. The name of the tank probably means 'abounding in mangoes'. We come across a similar name Āmrilika-vāhā,<sup>11</sup> which possibly denotes a stream connected with the above mentioned tank. Another tank, Khaṇḍa-bhedaka, was situated near the river Vatsavāhaka in the district of Nimbakūpa-sthali,<sup>1</sup> The name Akṣa-saraka,<sup>2</sup> so often mentioned in the inscriptions of the Maitraka dynasty, gives indication of its connection with a saraka, i.e., a lake or a pond. All these references from the grants of the rulers of the Maitraka dynasty indicate that the territory of Saurāṣṭra was abounding in lakes and tanks and the lands donated very often happened to be in the vicinity of them.

Kuṇāla, Paruvi, Puṣkara and Sudarśana are the other important lakes mentioned in the inscriptions. Kuṇāla is represented by the Kolleru lake in the south of Pithapuram, between the rivers Godavari and Krishna.<sup>3</sup> The great lake of Paruvi was situated in the Paruvi-riṣaya, the headquarters of which is taken to have been at modern Parigi, seven miles north of Hindupur in the Anantapur district.<sup>4</sup> The place is still noted for its capacious tank. A great lake comparable to the holy lake of Puṣkara is mentioned in two Nandśa Yūpa inscriptions, as having on its bank the sacrificial pillars of holy trees against which bulls with full youthful vigour scratch their horns.<sup>5</sup> The Sudarśana lake, which existed in the vicinity of the Junagarh, had an embankment, which was constructed by the Provincial Governor, Pusyagupta in the region of the Maurya ruler Candragupta. Some improvements in this lake were carried out in the region of Aśoka by his Governor, Tuṣāṣpha. Owing to the excessive rainfall during the reign of Rudradāman in about 150 A.D., the embankment was rent as under by the greatly augmented speeds of the rivers, such as Suvarṇasikātī and Palāśinī, emerging out of the mountain, Ūrjayat.<sup>6</sup> Rudradāman got the embankment repaired and the renewed embankment was made so strong that it continued to be in working order for three centuries to come. The Junagarh inscription<sup>7</sup> of Skandagupta informs us that in 455-56 A.D., the lake again burst in consequence of excessive rains. The restoration of the breach, by renewing the embankment was effected under the orders of Cakrapālita after two months work in 456-57 A.D. The further history of the lake is not traceable.

CONCLUSION

The preceding pages leave an impression that, apart from literary sources, epigraphic records are the richest and the most authentic source of ancient Indian historical geography. The inscriptions tell us about thousands of districts, smaller divisions, cities, towns and villages, and even mountains, rivers and lakes—many of which would, otherwise, have been, altogether, unknown. The epigraphs are of great help to us in the identification of different geographical units known to us from literature. This corroboration is of immense importance, as it enables us to determine the precise location of a particular place. This also gives an idea of the vast extent of this country called Jambudvīpa from Kamboja to Kāmarūpa and from Kashmir to Tāmrāparṇī. Inscriptions put forth before us the names of the capitals and skandhāvāras of different kings. Certain places, again, famous for their mineral contents and agricultural products, flora and fauna, and such other valuable resources are known from them. In fine, matters connected to the ancient political and cultural geography in all their aspects are brought to light by the epigraphical literature.

Inscriptions belonging to later periods are richer still and, therefore, require further exploration in the hands of scholars. As Professor V. S. Agarwala has so pertinently remarked, 'A complete concordance of all the geographical names with details about them on the basis of the thousands of published inscriptions from all over India would constitute the eternal bed-rock of ancient Indian geography'.<sup>1</sup> It is with a view to partially fulfilling the above idea that the present study has been made.

the city, which was on the bank of Śoṇa—perhaps the most thickly populated.

During the rule of the Śuāgas and the Kaṇvas, the city may have fallen a prey to the ferocity of a foreign invasion.<sup>1</sup> But finally it fell victim to the vandalism of the Hūṇas.

According to Fa-hien, the royal palace and the halls in the midst of the city, the walls and the gates and the inlaid sculpture work seemed to be the work of super-human spirits.<sup>2</sup>

During the recent excavation in 1952-53, an inscription was found from a ruined structure engraved ārogya vihāra in Mauryan Brahmi. The Ārogya Vihāra may have been some kind of hospital or sanatorium in the neighbourhood of the hall.<sup>3</sup>

Pāṭaliputra had its two other names Puṣpapura and Kusumapura—both meaning the city of the flowers. Puṣpapura is mentioned in Allahabad Stone Pillar inscription<sup>4</sup> of Samudragupta, while Kusumapura is mentioned by Hiuen-tsang.<sup>5</sup>

PERNNAGARA

The name is engraved in Nallala inscription<sup>6</sup> of Durvinita and Mallohalli grant<sup>7</sup> of the same king. The place has been identified with Pennagara in Salem district in Madras.

PIṢṬAPURA

Ragolu Plates of Śaktivarman, and Tekkali grant of Umavarman both were issued from Piṣṭapura,<sup>8</sup> the royal seat of the Māthara dynasty. The city of Piṣṭapura finds further mention in Srungavarapukota Plates of Anantavarman, the ruler of Devarāṣṭra and in Tandivada grant of Pṛthivī Mahārāja.<sup>9</sup> Further in two inscriptions of Pulakeśin, the Cālukya Emperor, the name occurs in one way or other.<sup>10</sup> Aihole inscription of Pulakeśin describes Piṣṭapura as a fortress. It is clear that Piṣṭapura, which is identical with Pithapuram, the chief town of a taluq in the East Godavari
